TROUBLE IN THE CROWD.

Boy with a Pipe and Man with a Pane of Glass and a Bundle of Brass Strips.

This procession of destruction was led by a boy. He bore on his left shoulder a slender brass pipe about fifteen feet in length. It was polished in places, and reflected the sunlight with a vicious glitter. Fifty feet behind him came a man, trudging along with the stooping gait of a laborer. This man carried a large pane of glass. One corner of it rested in the bend of his left arm, one corner pointed upward two feet above his head. The two other corners projected two feet before and behind him. This glass also reflected the sunlight with a blinding flash when it happened to turn to the proper angle. Fifty feet behind him came a man carrying in his left hand four flexible and at times unmanageable brass strips, which flapped up and down and sideways, and at times rapped on the sidewalk, now before, now behind the carrier.

A deadlier combination could not be imagined, and the crowds of people on the east side of the Bowery noted the progress of this parade with terror and rage.
