LOCAL BREVITIES.

The meeting of the Board of Education tonight is expected to be an interesting one.

Secretary Sears of the Chamber of Commerce has received a letter from Indianapolis inquiring about the possibility of employment for barbers and butchers in Salt Lake City. It appears that the knights of the razor and cleaver in the Hoosier State have got the impression that there is a dearth of their professional brethren in this town, but Mr. Sears will disabuse their minds of this idea.

New Companies.

Articles of incorporation of the Phoenix Silver Mining company were filed with Secretary Sells today. The company is capitalized with a stock of $500,000. The incorporators are: H. T. Duke, A. Hanauer, Jr., W. H. H. Hoffheimer, F. Bohnman, John Brown, Andrew Gebhardt and Wm. Schade.

Articles of incorporation of the Box Elder Pioneer Creamery Company were also filed with the same official. The amount of capital stock is fixed at $10,000 divided into 200 shares at the par value of $50 each. The incorporators are J. R. Smurthwaite and 19 others.

At Winter Quarters.

The residents of Winter Quarters celebrated Pioneer Day on Monday last in good style. The forenoon programme of exercises embraced prayer, vocal and instrumental music (the Winter Quarters brass band having been present), and addresses. Nuts and oranges were distributed among the juveniles. There were sports for the youngsters in the afternoon and an excellent time was had all round.

Work [illegible] the coal mines has started up. [illegible] is coming into camp daily. The Y. M. and Y. L. M. I. A. held a conjoint meeting last Sunday evening before a large audience. All are pleased with the new manual.

The health of the people is good.

A DANGEROUS COMBUSTION.

Children and Matches Cause the Destruction of a Barn.

A fire at Ogden at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon destroyed a barn belonging to Mrs. Helen Taylor, in the rear of her residence on Adams avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets. The barn contained a lot of hay, and the building was almost consumed before the fire department reached the scene, the fire alarm not having been turned in until it was too late. How the fire originated is not known, but it is supposed that children were playing with matches, when the hay became ignited and caught the barn. Damage about $600; insured for $500, with Ballantyne's agency. The prompt work of the department and the use of a garden hose prevented the barn of W. W. Fife from burning to the ground. As it was, a large pile of lumber, valued at $300, was consumed. Over two blocks of hose were laid.

AT BEAVER CITY.

Elder Andrew Jenson Furnishes Some Useful Information by Letter.

Editor Deseret News:

From the Parowan Stake of Zion I traveled to Beaver City on the 5th of May last, when I continued my historical labors.

The Beaver Stake of Zion is one of the smallest Stakes in existence at the present time, but the Saints residing within its borders are, as a rule, wealthy and prosperous. The Stake numbers 1971 members of the Church, or 391 families, distributed in the four wards of which the Stake is composed, as follows: Beaver ward, 1151 souls, or 248 families; Greenville, 179 souls, or 32 families; Adamsville, 268 souls, or 51 families; Minersville, 373 souls, or 52 families.

The Stake presidency consists of Charles Dennis White president, Marcus L. Shepherd first and John F. Tolton second counselor. The boundaries of the Stake are co-extensive with those of Beaver county, Utah.

Beaver City, which comprises the greater half of the "Mormon" population of Beaver county, is beautifully situated in an open, well watered valley, on the north bank of the Beaver River. It was first settled in 1856, and has had a peculiar and interesting history, including fights with hostile Indians, collisions with land-jumpers, various federal officials, and treespassing soldiers, and losses caused by devouring grasshoppers and destructive rabbits. But it has survived all these difficulties, and is now one of the most prosperous settlements in the mountains, with a mixed population of "Mormons" and Gentiles. The latter, however, do not now number over one hundred individuals, while they a few years ago were so numerous that they made attempts to carry the county and city elections. Beaver is celebrated for its cleanliness, its pure water, healthy climate, productive soil and splendid grazing facilities. The Beaver ward includes in its membership several families residing on North Creek, Indian Creek and Pine Creek, three streams rising in the mountains northeast of Beaver; also a few scattered settlers who live on the south side of Beaver river in a neighborhood locally known as Jackson County. George Munford is the Bishop of the ward. Beaver City has a woolen factory, a grist mill, four saw mills, planing mills, a number of stores and a great many neat brick dwellings. It also supports a weekly newspaper, the Utonian, and is the main seat of operations for the Second District court of Utah, besides being the county seat of Beaver county.

The altitude of Beaver is 5,970 feet above the level of the sea. It is 33 miles southeast of Milford, the nearest railway station, and 233 miles from Salt Lake City, by way of Milford and Minersville.

Greenville Ward (first settled in 1861) embraces the village of Greenville and the settlers living in a scattered condition in its vicinity. The village is situated on the north or right bank of Beaver River about half a mile below the point where North Creek empties into that stream, and five miles southwest of Beaver City.

Adamsville ward comprises the village of Adamsville and a few scattered farmers residing in its immediate vicinity, and is situated on the lower end of Beaver Valley, near the point where Indian Creek empties into the Beaver from the north. The village is nine miles southwest of Beaver, nine miles northeast of Minersville, and twenty-three miles southeast of Milford. Fred. Thomas Gunn is the Bishop. Adamsville was first settled in 1862.

Minersville is the second place of importance in Beaver county, and is situated at the mouth of a canyon six miles long through which the Beaver river passes beyond that low mountain chain that separates Beaver valley from the desert country lying westward. The town of Minersville, which was first settled in 1859, has a fine location on the south bank of the Beaver, but is rather windy. The facilities of the place are very limited owing to scarcity of water, but [illegible] little land has been redeemed from the desert is quite productive. Owing to its lower altitude, and for other causes, spring opens about three weeks earlier here than at Beaver and the seasons throughout are much warmer than in the Beaver valley. Consequently fruit trees do well, and Minersville has a number of fine orchards. Solomon Walker is Bishop of the ward, which embraces a few Saints residing in the two railway and mining towns, Milford and Frisco.

From Minersville I returned home by team, arriving in Salt Lake City on the 30th of May. During my absence of more than three months I had traveled 1425 miles by team and visited all the settlements in the Kanab, St. George, Parowan and Beaver Stakes of Zion. On the trip I attended two quarterly conferences, preached 56 times and gathered material for the histories of all the places visited.

Andrew Jenson.

Expressive Slang.

Official slang and political slang have a tendency to use the fewest number of words to express an idea and the fewest number of syllables to make the word. There is the use of the word "made" instead of promoted, "bade" instead of dismissed from the service, "got at" to mean that some one has been successfully induced to do something, "pull" to signify influence, favoritism and official friendship, "pulled" to sum up what happens when a squad of policemen make a number of prisoners at once from the same place, "fell down" to show that there has been a final failure in what was undertaken, "done up" in the sense of the demolition and crushing of some one. These are a few samples. A little thought will enable any one to add a number of others. They show the tendency of one class of popular slang to brevity and sententiousness.—New York Sun.

Proof Positive.

Said an honest Marshfield farmer in 1776 as he met the clergyman of the village very early in the opening day:

"Ah, good mornin, parson! Another fine day."

Then he nodded his head significantly toward the sun just appearing above the cloudless horizon of Massachusetts bay, and added:

"They do say the birth moves and the sun stands still, but you and I, parson, we git up early and we see it rise!"—Youth's Companion.

Poor Proof.

Tolde—I flatter myself that honesty is printed on my face.

Critic—Well—er—yes, perhaps—with some allowance for typographical errors.—Exchange.

An Odd Courtship.

A story of a queer courtship and marriage is given to the newspapers by Dr. D. [illegible], of Camden, who says that eighteen months ago he bought a lot of letters from a firm in Peoria, Ills., his object being to obtain names for advertising his business. Among them was one from Mrs. Ruth A. Robinson, of Westminster, S. C., which so pleased him that he wrote to the lady.

More letters, an exchange of photographs and an agreement to meet in New York followed. The couple came to Swainsboro, where they were married at the groom's mother's. The lady, who came north against the advice of her friends, says she has seen no reason to regret her decision yet.—Lewiston Journal.

Captain George W. Terry, of the fishing schooner Alice, reports that his boat was almost run down by a floating island in the Pacific ocean off Cape Flattery. The captain and crew went on it and made partial exploration. There was a hut and a small farm on the island and other signs of habitation, although there were no signs of life.

INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS.

Treatment of Cattle for Lumpy Jaw, and Inspection of Pork.

Chicago, July 28.—Secretary Rusk is in the city in connection with an experiment he is preparing to try on a large scale in the treatment of the disease known as lumpy jaw. It has recently been treated successfully by the administration internally of iodine of potassium. One of the inspectors of the bureau of animal industry and the secretary expects to have it tested on two hundred head of cattle affected with lumpy jaw, to settle the question as to the value of the remedy. It is given in doses of one to three drachms, dissolved in pure water. It is best administered before feeding, and the dose should vary according to the size and weight of the cattle. The treatment can be applied without danger by any farmer. The secretary is also interested in extending microscopic inspection of pork as the demand for inspected pork is continually increasing, and it brings about half a cent per pound more in American and British markets than uninspected.

The packing season begins in October and the secretary desires to have his force in a condition to inspect a much larger number of carcasses than last season. The markets of Denmark, Germany, Austria, France, Spain and Italy have been opened to inspected pork during the past year and it requires a large quantity to supply them. It is estimated that the farmers of the country will receive a cent a pound more for hogs marketed this year than if there were no inspection. The secretary is greatly encouraged by the marked success which has attended the inspection.

Mount Etna Active.

Catania, July 28.—The eruption of Mount Etna is again very violent. Immense masses of rock are projected to great height and dense clouds overhang the summit of the mountain. The subterranean rumblings are severe enough to cause the windows to rattle in the neighborhood. The lava streams are again advancing.

The opponents of the appropriation at once began filibustering with motions to adjourn, to adjourn till Saturday, adjourn till Monday, etc.

The Republicans decided to let the filibustering and anti-filibustering wings of the Democratic party fight it out and on a call of the House declined to vote. So the call was ordered by a small and close vote of 31 to 29.

The Senate bill making eight hours a day's work on the public works of the United States and in the District of Columbia was passed; also one for the purchase of Bancroft's library. The anti-Option bill was taken up and a motion to refer it to the committee on finance laid on the table.

THE CIRCUS TICKETS DID IT.

Tactics That Carried a Election Without Any Speechmaking.

When the circus was here and the house found itself without a quorum, George D. Wise, of Virginia, told a good election story. Mr. Wise in his youth was a page in the United States senate. Senator Gorman was a page at the same time, and two other boys who were pages in that period were afterward elected to congress. But Mr. Wise's story did not relate to his experiences as a senate page. It was founded on fact. The scene was Hanover Court House, in Mr. Wise's district. Mr. Wise and one of the nominees for elector at large were announced to speak "on the issues of the day" at Hanover.

"When we got to town," said Mr. Wise, "we discovered that a circus had spread its canvas for that very afternoon. The crowd was large, but I had my doubts as to how the speechmaking would go in opposition to the circus. The meeting was set for 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and I knew that the circus people would begin to do business at about the same time. There didn't seem to be anything to do but to go ahead with our appointment. We had the meeting called to order, and I told the elector that courtesy demanded that he, being a candidate on the state ticket, should make the first speech. He was inclined to waive that and have me begin, but I insisted. I knew that the circus crush was coming and I preferred to have him face it. So the elector was introduced and started off. All was ominously quiet around the circus tent. The crowd gathered to hear the speaking, and the elector began to warm up to the occasion.

"He had spoken perhaps fifteen minutes when suddenly the band struck up, the ticket seller took his place and the canvas door was thrown open. That crowd turned as one man and started for the show. In two minutes there wasn't anybody around the platform, and I was the only person besides the elector upon the platform. The elector stopped and looked at me. 'It's no use talking against a circus,' said I, and we got down and followed the crowd which was gathering around the ticket seller. I had brought out some money from Richmond to extend hospitalities to my hearers when I finished the speech I expected to make. I hunted up one of my best friends in the crowd and handing him some money I said:

"'Here, you buy tickets to the circus with this and give them to the right persons with my compliments.'

"The next minute my friend was shouting at the top of his voice, 'Ladies and gentlemen, the Hon. George D. Wise has authorized me to see that every one of you has a ticket to the show, with his compliments.'

"With that the crowd shouted and crowded up. I saw my money go into the hands of the ticket seller and I saw the crowd pass into the circus at my expense. Of course there was no stopping after that. It took the last quarter out of my pocket before the job was finished and then I stood with my crowd inside and I shone on the outside. The circus manager came over to me and with a grin complimented me on my electioneering tactics. He wanted to know if I wasn't going to see the show and I told him the condition of my pockets. 'Pass right in, Mr. Wise,' he said, and I went.

"When the returns came from Hanover Court House after the election I found I had swept the precinct clean."—Washington Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Farmer and His One Legged Hen.

A progressive farmer in Lone Tree valley has a hen that has set the example of all the geese waggling. It is a common barnyard hen, but it has nevertheless [illegible]. Some months ago a trap snapped on the hen's leg and broke it. The farmer was in the barn at the time and heard the hen squawk, and upon examination found the only standing limb in leg. He took his knife, cut the broken leg off and turned her loose, and in due time she recovered and was the liveliest kind of a one legged hen.

After the accident, however, the hen would not go near the barn, and in fact had a habit of wandering off by herself. Three weeks ago it was discovered that she had a nest full of eggs in a fence corner and was sitting on them. The eggs were looked after and watched, looking a good deal like turkey eggs, except that they were small.

Last week seven of the eggs hatched and they were the funniest looking chickens that were ever hatched. Instead of feathers they were covered with a woolly covering that resembled fur, a sort of cross between feathers and hair. Four of the little chickens had veritable [illegible] stood straight up from the two above the back, giving them a very [illegible] look. All the women are sure that it is a case of spoiled chicken.—Sun Jose Mercury.

Two Faithful Dogs.

A [illegible] story comes from Sierra Madre. A little girl whose mother resides at that place saw a large snake while playing near the house, and being pleased with its appearance she followed it through the grass, trying to get hold of it. Two faithful dogs belonging to the family saw the snake also, and running after it got ahead of the little girl in the chase and pounced upon the animal. An alarmed rattle [illegible] strikes and the dogs ran yelping back, while the little tot, now led, witnessed the encounter, [illegible] that the fighting serpent was not so pretty as it first appeared. When the mother, who happened to be absent, returned and found the child unhurt [illegible] dogs in her dooryard and her little daughter [illegible] and safely asleep in bed, it may be taken for granted that a prayer of gratitude went up from her heart for the fortunate escape of the little one.—Pasadena [illegible].

The capital invested in California's vineyards is $67,000,000. Two hundred thousand acres planted to young vines are producing 400,000 tons of grapes and 17,000,000 gallons of wine yearly.

One of the largest camellia trees in Europe is now in full bloom, near Dresden. It was taken from Japan 150 years ago, is fifty feet high and has an estimated average of 40,000 blossoms.
