THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

"LET US LOVE NOT IN WORD ONLY, BUT IN DEED AND TRUTH."

It Was When He Was "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day" That He Saw the Heaven Opened—He Not Empty-ed the Holy Dove.

St. John was called the "beloved disciple." The Lord Jesus loved all "his own," but John seems to have been very near his heart. Once, at the table, where the disciples were at supper with the Lord, John leaned upon his breast, and he was so near of the love of Jesus that he was not afraid to ask him any question. How sweet to be so near to Him!

When John was quite an old man he wrote to one of the churches in Asia. He says: "These things write I unto you, little children, that ye sin not. I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. My little children, let us not love in word only, but in deed and in truth." It is said of him that when he grew so old he could not walk to the place of worship, he was carried there, and in every meeting he would say, "My dear children, love one another."

John showed his love for Jesus "in deed" when he was sent to the lonely island of Patmos because he would not deny his faith in him. Christians suffered a great deal for Jesus' sake in those days, but it is said "they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."

On the lonely island where, perhaps, no sound was heard but the sea waves dashing on the rocks, John says he was "in the spirit on the Lord's day." It may be he felt lonely on that Lord's day morning. When the sun rose over the sea, perhaps he had leaned with great longing over the waters toward his home and friends, and it may be he wished very much he could see some of his fellow Christians and know whether they felt lonely like himself. It would have comforted him to talk with them of many things Jesus had said when he was with them, before he was crucified. But the Lord would not let this true, dear friend of his feel lonely very long. He wanted him to know what is true now, that Jesus is never far away from those who truly love him and are ready to suffer for his sake. John says, "I heard behind me a voice." It was the same voice that once had spoken so softly to him when he had leaned upon Jesus' bosom years before. Now it was loud and full of strength. At first John was afraid. His eyes and ears were not used to the glory of the other world. He says, "I fell at his feet as one dead, but he laid his right hand upon me and said, Fear not." Then John knew he was the gentle Saviour, "the same yesterday, today and forever," and he was no more afraid.

No longer lonely now, he sits under the shadow of the rock, industriously to hear what the Lord would say, so that he may write it for us to read. Wonderful things he wrote! They took us that if we truly love Jesus, as long as we live in this world, we shall have to suffer for his sake. They tell us that Satan makes war with Christ, and tries to get his people away from him, and that wicked people plot mischief against those who try to do good. But over all this dark picture the face of God shines "like the sun in his strength." John saw beyond the clouds into the very midst of heaven, and he heard the angels and the people redeemed from the earth singing and chanting victory. Oh, we can never doubt that good will triumph over evil at last, since John has told us what he saw that Lord's day morning! Over and over again he says, "Blessed is he that overcometh"—that is, who gets the victory over sin. Listen, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of the city of my God, and I will write upon him my new name."

How blessed to have God's name written upon us, so that everybody knows, as soon as they see us, that we belong to him. There is a little child who always has his father's name and where he lives written on a card and pinned to his dress, so that if he wanders off people will know who he is and will bring him safe home. You can never be lost in this great, sinful world if you have your heavenly father's name and the name of the heavenly city written in your heart.

If John had not been "in the spirit" on the Lord's day he would never have heard these "blessed and true sayings." And we will miss, oh, so much that God would say to us if we are careless and forgetful of our worship on the day which he calls his.—Christian Advocate.

Planting Potatoes.

In his book "The New Potato Culture," Mr. Carman advocates planting the seed pieces in depts according to the soil, whether hilling to clay or sand, from three inches to five inches. The distance of the hills or drills, and the plants thus, would be regulated by the vigor and size of the seed pieces planted. Rank growing varieties, the same as tall growing corn, will not yield well if planted too closely together. Experiments with placing the fertilizer under and over the seed pieces gave results in favor of the fertilizer over the pieces.

Detection of Metals.

One frosty English morning of last "Hilarik"—says Pick Ome Awwit in an interesting work on the Norsemen, is said to date from Bill's days, "Hoo," the Frenchmen called our Bill, and there was a law that if a man was in danger himself he could let money dabog any damage to his neighbor's property. Well, Bill was in a tree down in Dixie Bill's name. At a wind of the cry everybody was bound on the instant to give chase to the offender, and whoever failed to respond to the cry of "Hu Bill" went yet a heavier fine to Bill himself. This brought the old English hollo of "hue and cry," as well as our cousin of shouting "Hurrah" when an event pleased and startled.

A Fatalistic Farmer.

We think most nonsensicists will subscribe to the doctrine that the "average harvest" grew quickly of corn, tomatoes, Cottage potatoes, sweetness, cucumbers, vegetable and the like, yet quickly in most seasons. The ripening of tobacco grows rapidly sometimes, if the weather favors. Genius, which not highly nourishes in Hell, is an excellent in climate to stand tournament in a flagging rapidly, and it waxed in good wine instead of water, a thing not half so strong allowed for each half pint, is with an average allowed for each half pint, is with an average allowed for each half pint, is with an average
