May Reside in New York—Rumor has it that A. W. McCune, for years a Salt Laker, is to take up his residence in New York. Mr. McCune is interested with New Yorkers in mining properties in Peru and his business keeps him in New York the major portion of his time. Col. E. A. Wall, who, it was reported, was going to buy the McCune mansion on Main and First North streets, denies the report.

Teachers' Institute—A teachers' institute was held yesterday afternoon at the Lafayette school, work in the primary grades being considered. The persons addressing the meeting were: W. A. Wetzell, musical director; Miss Johnson, supervisor of physical education; Miss Pollock, supervisor of the primary department; and J. Leo Fairbanks, art supervisor. Some of the schools were dismissed to permit teachers to attend the gathering.

Wreck at Dale Siding—The Park City local of the Rio Grande was held up two hours last evening by a freight wreck near Dale siding in the canyon. Two freight cars jumped the tracks, tearing up the rails and ties in great shape. The passenger due in this city from the camp at 5.15 could do nothing but wait until a wrecking crew sent up from this city had cleared the tracks.

Consider Franchise Friday—In order to secure the aid of his colleagues in the consideration of the proposed franchise for the Utah Light & Railway company, Councilman Black last night secured the permission of the council to put off the action on the matter until Councilman Crabtree returns from Sacramento, where he has been in attendance upon the National Irrigation congress. The matter will come up Friday evening, recess having been taken last night for that purpose.

Dr. Ellen B. Ferguson, mother of the deceased, and his sister, Mrs. Clara Ferguson Wright, came from New York to attend the funeral. The family formerly resided in Salt Lake, but of late Douglas has been the only member remaining here. He was 45 years of age and unmarried. For several years he was a clerk in the office of the presiding bishop, and later was engaged in various clerical positions at the city and county building.

Richard C. Evans Coming—Richard C. Evans, one of the presidency of the Reorganized church, now en route from California to his headquarters in the east, will be in Salt Lake City for several days visiting his friends and looking after the various local interests of his church in this place. While here Elder Evans will undoubtedly discuss some of the differences existing between his church and the dominant Church in Utah.

STATE LITERARY CLEARING HOUSE

Work Covered by International Exchange System Established By Government.

FIGURES SHOW ITS SCOPE.

Packages Handled Last Year Weighed Nearly Half a Million Pounds—How Plan Operates.

The government's clearing house for official and scientific literature, known as the international exchange system or the Smithsonian exchanges, during the fiscal year ending June 30, last, handled 189,820 packages of books weighing altogether 469,536 pounds, and distributed to all parts of the globe 1,832 boxes of publications aggregating 320,000 pounds. Of the boxes, 265 contained full sets of United States government documents for authorized depositories, and the balance consisted of departmental and other publications for miscellaneous correspondents. There appeared on the list of Smithsonian exchange correspondents at the close of the year, 58,107 separate addresses.

These figures furnish some idea of the large scope of operation of a system which, outside the scientific and academic world is not generally known.

Dr. Cyrus Adler, assistant secretary of the Smithsonian institution in charge of the library and exchanges, explained recently the purpose and work of this international literary clearing house.

"The exchange service," he said, "is almost as old as the institution itself. It was originally designed for the purpose of exchanging Smithsonian publications for those of other learned societies and faculties. Through the action of Congress and through a treaty negotiated with various foreign countries to which many nations have since adhered, it has become an important international agency for the exchange of governmental, scientific, and literary publications. It is devised to benefit the institutions in this country and abroad, serving as one of the most important means for carrying out the fundamental purpose of the institution, 'the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men.'

"It is through this system that the original documents, reports of scientific experiments, official transactions of societies, government publications, and like productions are sent to the libraries and kindred institutions of the world, at a great saving of labor and expense. Instead of each society, association, or academy sending documents to a thousand others, a constant circulation is maintained through the medium of the Smithsonian institution.

"The operation of an official exchange bureau of this sort gains the benefits of centralized effort. When boxes and packages are properly stamped by the Smithsonian institution and marked 'International Exchanges,' custom inspection is waived. For a long time many steamship lines went so far as to provide free transportation on all packages of Smithsonian exchanges. Further privileges, such as the waiving of certain consular fees on bills of lading are enjoyed by the exchange system, making it altogether of great service not only to the government which supports it but to its citizens as well. The government appropriation available for this service during the present year is $32,000."

IDEA NOT NEW.

The idea of an international literary exchange system is not new. It was first permanently inaugurated seventy years ago by M. Alexandre Vattemare, of Paris. As early as 1694, however, the Royal Liberary of France, authorized by King Louis XIV, conducted an international exchange for several years, and the American Philosophical society (founded in 1743) and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences (founded in 1780), at the beginning of the nineteenth century, traded their proceedings and transactions for those of foreign scientific societies. Mr. Vattemare's efforts began in 1832, when he succeeded in interesting many learned men of Europe in his plans. In 1839 he visited the United States and secured the indorsement of many leading Americans, among them Washington Irving, Joel R. Poinsett, then secretary of war, Gulian G. Verplanck, and also the governments of a number of cities. On his second visit to this country he was designated as the agent of the Library of Congress to conduct the exchange system established between France and the United States.

The National institute of this country in 1840 set up a similar international exchange of natural history specimens.

Although the Smithsonian exchange system had no direct connection with those established between national governments by Vattemare, it soon superseded all other plans for international exchanges. The institution was founded in 1846, "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." To further the second term of this bequest, the first volume of the Smithsonian publications, on the ancient monuments of the Mississippi valley by Squier and Davis, was issued in 1848, and distributed in this country and abroad.

The germs of the present exchange system are evident in the words of the first secretary, Joseph Henry, who wrote as early as 1852:

"The worth and importance of the institution are not to be estimated by what it accumulates within the walls of its building but by what it sends forth to the world. Its great mission is to facilitate the use of all the implements of research, and to diffuse knowledge, which this use may develop. The Smithsonian publications are sent to some institutions abroad, and to the great majority of those at home, without any return except, in some cases, that of co-operation in meterological and other observations.

GROWTH OF SYSTEM.

The growth of the system is shown in another quotation from Secretary Henry. This in 1854:

"There is no port to which the Smithsonian parcels are shipped where duties are charged on them—a certified invoice of contents by the secretary being sufficient to pass them through the customs house free of duty. On the other hand all packages addressed to the institution, arriving at the ports of the United States, are admitted, without detention, duty free. This system of exchange is, therefore, the most extensive and efficient which has ever been established in any country."

Agencies had been formed in London and Leipsic, and the bureaus of the U. S. government took advantage of the service to distribute their technical publications to foreign libraries and to collect similar reports in return. Over 20,000 such packages were carried between 1851 and 1867.

At this time and in fact until 1881, the expense of the service was born entirely by the institute. Many volumes of congressional documents, had been forwarded since 1867 through the institution at the request of the national legislature, until the expense became a drain hard to bear. In 1881 Congress appropriated $3,000 partly to defray the cost of its share in the service. Since then, recognizing its value more and more, Congress has gradually increased its appropriations.

As now conducted, the rules for the control of the exchange service provide, in addition to the distribution of the U. S. government publications to foreign libraries, for the distribution abroad of books, pamphlets, charts, and other printed matter sent as donations or exchanges from literary and scientific societies, or individuals to correspondents abroad, and involve no expense to the sender beyond that of delivery to the Smithsonian institute in Washington. No charge is made to the receiver except in some instances the cost of delivery from the Smithsonian agent or correspondent nearest him. Similar material sent from abroad to this country is forwarded to the recipient without expense to him, the packages having been delivered free of freight charges to the foreign agent or correspondent of the institution.

THREE PAID AGENCIES.

The figures for the past year quoted above, give an idea of proportions to which the international exchange service has grown. Three paid agencies abroad are now maintained in London, in Leipsic and in Buda-Pest. The shipments sent abroad by the Smithsonian exchange service include practically every organized community in the world from Iceland to South Africa. They are made in uniform packages or boxes, and shipments to smaller communities are sent whenever enough material has accumulated to warrant its transmission. To larger agencies the service is weekly. To France last year went 153 boxes and 12,061 packages, to Great Britain and Ireland 308 boxes and 20,123 packages, and similar amounts to other large agencies, supplying in all nearly 60,000 correspondents. In return, France sent 4,687 packages of books, Great Britain and Ireland 7,927, British America 309, and so on.

It may be seen from the larger figures on the shipment side that the United States government is more generous than any other nation in the matter of publishing and giving away literature of a scientific and educational nature.

The exchange service is limited to voluntary contributions from recognized societies, institutions, or facilities. The United States does not undertake to ship free of charge books purchased in different countries, nor scientific apparatus or instruments. The exchanges are still administered with the same ultimate purpose as at their inauguration—"for the diffusion of knowledge among men."

The members of the Eighth quorum of seventy will resume their regular meetings on Thursday evening, Sept. 12, at 7:30 o'clock sharp in the Twelfth ward meetinghouse. A full attendance is desired as there is important business to come before the quorum.
