VITALITY IN VARIETY.

With the elevation of Sir Charles Russell to the exalted place lately left vacant by the death of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, England has an Irishman as lord chief justice, a Jew as lord chancellor, a Scotchman as prime minister, and is likely to have another as leader of the House of Commons should Sir Wm. Harcourt retire, a step that is quite probable. Noting and commenting upon this monopoly of all the high posts of the British empire by Scotchmen or Irishmen, the Review of Reviews ironically suggests that the English will soon be of as little account in their own country as Americans are in their city government.

The sarcasm may not in truth be quite so biting as its literal terms would indicate, but it cannot be deemed as altogether without a sting. Nevertheless, it opens up a wide field for thought and reflection. True it is that if the United States today had to depend upon native Americans for the brain and the brawn, the intellect and the industry, the sturdy foundation and the more ornamental superstructure of the body politic and the nation, many of the evidences of present greatness would be wanting. Demagogues, and only such, mouth about the dreadful effects of the incursion of "foreign hordes," and the dire effects certain to follow this invasion of the New World by the overplus of the Old. But sensible men—observers, students, philosophers and statesmen—recognize the inestimable and the inextinguishable debt that this country owes to the infusion of foreign blood. Where would the Republic be without the thrifty Northmen from the Scandinavian countries, the stout peasantry from Germany, the keen-witted and cheerful sons of Erin, the honest, industrious Briton and Scot? Puritan blood in the North and cavalier blood in the South would hardly have sufficed for the many and various calls that have been made upon our patriotism and in the building up of the nation. While some classes of immigration have been objectionable, and while the time has perhaps come when restrictions should take the place of the freedom with which our gates have been thrown open to the migratory world, it will not be denied that so far as the balance sheet of the past is concerned, the advantage has been decidedly ours. What is true of continued in-and-in breeding in the more useful branches of the brute creation is equally true of the human animal: the race deteriorates in strength and ambition, in courage and energy, in force and beauty. New blood, even if not always as blue and as pure as the strain with which it is mixed, is not by any means to be classified as an evil; if it only be healthy and sound, it is certain to prove a profound benefit.

Recurring, in conclusion, to the high honors held by Scotchmen and Irishmen in the British government, the English are to be congratulated that the requisite talents are still to be found among their fellow-citizens of the same empire. The fact would seem to postpone for a time at least, the necessity of another Danish invasion or a second Norman conquest.

OUTLOOK FOR WHEAT.

"An Idahoan," writing from [illegible], a section where large quantities of grain are raised, contributes some interesting remarks on the wheat question. The News is pleased to hear from him, and takes occasion [illegible] to say that the invitation to continue the discussion of this important subject is still open. "An Idahoan" says:

"The present outlook for wheat is very dull, and more especially does this apply to the wheat growers of the West, for there a geographical point [illegible] are at the [illegible] of the world, so to say, [illegible] [illegible].

"The first self-evident point is that we have a surplus of wheat in the West. This surplus will have no effect locally, in this way, that just what we could get for our surplus, if sold as possible to sell, will fix the price of the [illegible] of the product.

"And, looking this matter straight in the face, can our surplus be sold? If so, where and at what price? To all appearances, Europe is in no great need of our wheat, and if she was, our freight rates, our sea-board rates, and our limited freedom of exchange, stand in our way. As Mr. Webber says, Chicago is no point for western wheat. At any rate her supplies can be drawn from more advantageous points than ours.

"Looking at government statistics they tell us that New York and California are the two largest wheat exporting points, Chicago coming eighth on the list. Now the White Star and Cunard and other steamship companies are offering to carry, and are carrying, wheat to Europe for 2 cents per bushel from Boston and 3 cents from New York. These are the points of competition with Utah and Idaho wheat, if sold as a surplus. Subsidized steamships and the largest exchange points in the country are opposed to us—two and three cents per bushel being only ballast prices.

"Our wheat must go to the west coast for export, as there is not the slightest chance for eastern markets. After loading, it must sail all around the North and South American coast before it comes on terms with Boston and New York wheat. So that, with Europe not being in need of anything more than the normal amount, we are really closed out of the market, with the further disadvantage of our inability to sell the surplus, depreciating our home sales.

"Unless some freak of nature takes place in our own western locality which will give one portion the chance to 'church another,' in trade parlance, prices will be low, and extremely low, I think. The theory of the survival of the fittest is becoming applicable to the wheat question, and unless famine or freedom of exchange comes along, dry farms will fill a great portion of our wheat markets, as this can be done to a profit when irrigation fails.

"Mr. Webber falls back on his home market, but the time when our agricultural products will be consumed at home is many moons distant.

"If we have to sell in the West, we must try and work for the one object of buying in the West. When I say West, it means west of the Rockies to California. We must work for the Nicaragua canal, to give us an outlet without sailing around the coast. We must work that freedom of exchange be had, that will induce cargo seekers to make the west coast an object, and, without any want of patriotism, conditions will compel us to buy where we have to sell."

MISS FIELD'S PREDICTIONS.

Twenty months ago Kate Field was asked a number of questions as to certain American conditions, celebrities and problems as they would exist a hundred years hence. Among other queries propounded were: "What American now living will be most honored in 1993?" "Where will be our greatest city?" "What about temperance legislation?" etc., etc. Miss Field answered them, at the time, according as whim or ability suggested, and now in the latest issue of her paper she resurrects her forecast of nearly two years ago, observing that in the light of today several of the answers read curiously. To the first question she had given the following almost prophetic answer: "If he fulfils the expectation of his best friends, Grover Cleveland is the American now living who will be most honored in 1993. Never were the problems confronting this Republic so great and so many as those which the next President of the United States must meet and answer. On these answers depends our salvation for many a year to come; hence the necessity of a great and enlightened patriot in the White House, and hence such a verdict as I predict should Grover Cleveland prove himself to be the George Washington and Abraham Lincoln of this generation."

The second question in its answer will find more universal acceptance with local readers:

"Where will be our greatest city?"

"In all probability Chicago. There will be wonderful cities in the West, none more beautiful and extensive than Salt Lake City; but unless all signs fail, Chicago will take precedence."

Logically, it would seem that if no city is to be more beautiful and extensive than Salt Lake City, this metropolis should come near being the greatest city. Omitting criticism of this apparent lapsus, however, Utah people generally will appreciate the compliment bestowed upon their capital, realizing, as they do, the absolute certainty that it is well deserved.

THE PRIZE FOR COLORADO.

One of the many delightful features of Utah climate which is regarded as a special boon [illegible] is the refreshing summer showers which come to cool the atmosphere and lay the dust, [illegible] the fields, orchards and [illegible], and [illegible] with the [illegible] to make this the [illegible] part of the continent for [illegible]. Other [illegible] Utah towns also have their [illegible], and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to the [illegible] [illegible] considered, Salt Lake [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. For instance Denver was [illegible] on Thursday evening. Not [illegible] the News of that city published an account of the storm in [illegible] and after the thunder shower, from which the following is taken:

"For about thirty minutes the streets were transformed into canals and rivers [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Capitol hill [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] avenue, from Fourteenth to Thirty-sixth, was a river as wide as the street. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a foot of water, and [illegible] with difficulty. At Thirty-first and Downing the [illegible] street [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. At the corner of Thirty-sixth and Larimer, where Downing enters, there was a lake of water which [illegible] the whole [illegible] and stretched away down Thirty-eighth [illegible] [illegible] three feet deep. The Welton street [illegible] was [illegible] with sand and water [illegible] the great engines in the power house were stalled, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. The water poured down Twenty-eighth avenue into Walnut in immense volume and from Thirtieth street to Twenty-sixth the whole street was under from one to two feet of water. On Larimer street, from Thirty-third to Twenty-eighth, the whole street was a canal. Nearly every cellar was flooded and several houses had water pouring from the water pouring in the doors. On Pearl street houses were surrounded by water two feet deep. On Colfax street the water stood in depressions from one to two feet deep and rushed in torrents down the sidewalks, large planes and all kinds of debris floated down the middle of the street, stopping the cars and all vehicles. At [illegible] and Fifteenth was a particularly [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the cars, before they could be stopped, stepped knee deep into water. On the line of the Twenty-second avenue cars the road was practically impassable and traffic entirely suspended. From Williams street to the park the avenue looked like a lake, the water in some places standing fully three feet deep and being high enough to cover rockets on the cars at a number of places. On Seventeenth avenue, from Grant to Washington, the whole street was under water, and the cable trains looked more like some new kind of sailing craft than a land vehicle.

There is a further long account of how cellars and stores were soaked and flooded, gullies washed in the streets, places of amusement shut up because the audiences could not get there, etc., closing with the remark that "it was only an old fashioned Colorado rain." In Utah we must be content in summer to do with our comparatively insignificant yet pleasant and refreshing showers, for when it comes to summer rains with the attendant necessity for flatboats and [illegible] in the capital's principal streets as items of boom literature, we of Utah cheerfully award the palm to our eastern neighbor.

Some men seem to be always lucky, in coming through troubles by hair-breadth escapes while their companions go down around them. This seems to be the case with S. K. Martin & Co., of Chicago, proprietors of the greatest lumber yard in the world. They had $800,000 worth of lumber go up in the great Chicago fire which broke out Wednesday evening; but when the lumber was burned there was on it an insurance of more than three-fourths its value, so they can start out again on almost as broad a scale as they were operating a week ago. Had the fire happened a few hours later, however, they would have lost the whole amount, as at midnight on the evening when the fire started all the insurance would have expired, and could not have been renewed till the next day. The insurance companies which have to pay the loss may be very rich, as they should be to hand over the vast sum required, but they doubtless feel today that the lumbermen are the better off of the two parties in the apparent luck which favored them at such a time.

SIGNS of the TIMES

NO SPECIAL IMPROVEMENT IN SIGHT. HOW SHALL WE MEET THE SITUATION?

When Senator Teller said a few days ago that he could not now foresee the result of which these present conditions were leading us, and perhaps it is welling his peace of mind that he could not, it set many people to thinking very seriously.

But fortunately the American people are not given to yielding to difficulties, but to overcoming them. We anticipated a great depression in trade and began some months ago making preparations to meet it by preparing ourselves to make prices lower than ever before and for doing business with less profit than ever before, realizing in times like these that low prices would be the greatest attraction a merchant could offer. We have not laid off any of our old help, but have employed a large number of new, putting agents and travelers in new fields, and largely increasing our manufacturing department, and are rewarded by receiving a large increase in the number of orders. In fact, our agents and traveling salesmen are doing a very satisfactory business.

We are now making a very fine, neat business suit for $14.50 and [illegible] $16.50, $18.25 and $22 suits [illegible] are ones that Furnishers [illegible] the former $25 and $30, while our prices for the very finest worsteds are proportionately low.
