BY WAY OF SUGGESTION.

The NEWS, like every other honorable and independent paper, is always glad to give a hearing through its columns to any reputable correspondent who has a grievance to ventilate, a policy to criticise of the acts of public officials to expose or inquire into. We are here for the very purpose of raising a redress of grievances, even though we may have some of our own; being pledged to no party policy, we are not only ready ourselves to review usurping criticism wherever we think it may be deserved, but also to permit those who have examined into details and are able to point out necessary reforms, to offer their strictures and suggestions in their own words and way; having no pets or favorites either in or out of office, we never expect to shield or defend anyone whose public acts deserve rebuke, and we are at all times ready to offer the medium of a widely read column to exposure of official malfeasance. Generally speaking, where we have not been able to obtain such information ourselves, we are very pleased to have it supplied our readers by a correspondent, and if the letter is responsible and of good repute, we are content to withhold his name and permit his communication to appear over a nom-de-plume.

But in every community there is a class of fault-finders, who while they may be fully respectable and reliable, are nevertheless at times unreasonable; they have fallen into such a habit of criticism that nothing seems right, like the Irishman at Donnybrook fair, wherever they see a head they hit at it; all of which, while it may be evidence of perseverance and pugnacity, is less effective and forceful than if the assaults were better-aimed and more consistently made. In yielding to the fault-finding habit they are sometimes inaccurate in their charges, and very frequently small men whose duties and obligations they do not understand, and policies which their narrowness of vision does not enable them correctly to estimate.

We have a small class of that kind here, and some of them are excellent citizens and good friends of the NEWS. Usual y we like to talk with and hear from them, and in most cases if they have any views to submit to the public we are pleased to give them the opportunity. But there is a limit to good nature, as there are limits to good taste; and we have been somewhat pained at being criticised on our own part for not publishing everything they had chosen to offer.

In order to meet the objections thus urged, we have a proposition to submit to our friends, the perpetual critics; and that is that they divide with us the responsibility of their more acute assignment of public officials and their policy, by giving permission to publish their own names to their contributions. We are not afraid to tackle any man or subject that our own knowledge and observation enable us to criticise intelligently and with reason; but where we receive such information merely as a correspondent's say-so, and we already know the drift of his mind from long acquaintance, we should like to be able to say that he would be more sure of seeing his views and comments in print if in forwarding them to the editor he would say, "You are at perfect liberty to use my name if you want to."

What say you, friends? Shall we agree on the terms? Of course that a man who has a public complaint to utter is ready to make it use a man if in the judgment of the newspaper the use of a nom-de-plume would be unfair to the paper itself and to the men or measures against which the complaint is directed?

WORK FOR CONGRESS.

When the Fifty-fourth Congress assembles on Monday, Dec. 2, a great many familiar faces will be missing, owing to the late political upheaval in the country, among others Bland, of Missouri; Bourke Cockran, of New York; Bryan, of Nebraska; Holman, of Indiana; Breckinridge, of Kentucky, and Springer, of Illinois. The change is greater in the House than in the Senate, but even in the latter body some of the old timers will be missed. Among the new comers are ex-Senator Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, and ex-Senator Warren, of Wyoming, who takes the place of Carey.

There is an impression that the present session will be unable to accomplish much by way of legislation, notwithstanding the fact that there are several important questions that need immediate attention. But some of them are urgent.

Chief among these is the matter of providing revenue sufficient to meet the expenditures of the government, and thus restore the equilibrium, which the compromise tariff failed to do. It is sufficiently evident that Republicans and Democrats will find a way to agree on a measure by which the desired result can be obtained.

The financial problem is one that would seem to demand speedy attention. It is supposed that the proposition will again be brought up to pass a law authorizing the issue of bonds to maintain the gold reserve. But anyone that thinks is no indication of any measure for the adjustment of the financial situation.

Cuba is undoubtedly to have a hearing at no distant date. The insurgents will ask for recognition as belligerents, and this is sure to cause much debate.

The Nicaragua canal is another pending issue. The commission, it seems, after some investigation has come to the conclusion that more investigation is needed before work can be decided on, while views are of the opinion that work should be commenced at once.

The Bering question still furnishes occupation for our legislators. The agreement with England to pay $425,000 to sealers was, as will be remembered, rejected by the last House, and some other settlement must be made.

Then there are propositions affecting the organization of the army and the navy and others regarding the post-office department.

There is work enough even without the necessity of disentangling the complications arising on account of the political complexions of the Senate.

DEFENSE AGAINST TRAIN ROBBERS.

In view of the diabolically artistic manner in which train robberies are now committed by adepts at the business, the idea of the express messenger and the postal railway clerk cannot be said to be a very happy one. The dangerous best at accomplishing the looting of the cars in which treasure is carried, do not hesitate to blow open the doors with dynamite and molin or kill the occupants; and it has come to pass that men employed in the service are subjected not only to the exactions which their duties impose but to a continued nervous strain as well as the presence, almost any time, of actual physical danger.

It will give general satisfaction, therefore, when the new armored mail cars, which are being introduced on some lines, shall come into universal use. As described by a writer in the St. Paul Pioneer Press, these cars are exceedingly ingenious pieces of construction. They are supposed to be both bullet proof and wreck proof and judging from their description they are actually so. They are built without platforms, thus depriving the train robber of one means of approach. This makes it possible to couple them so closely that three cars appear as one, the whole being two and a half times the length of the ordinary car. It is only when rounding a curve that the three distinct cars are evident. There are no apparent doors. The two doors on each side, for the reception and delivery of mail, are too high for the egress of a train robber. They are constructed of two thicknesses of tough yellow pipe, running around the sides and ends, and sandwiched with a thick steel plate. This renders them absolutely bullet proof, and affords a partial protection against concussions received in an accident. In addition to this there are vestibule buffers at each end for the safety in collision, besides an anti-telescoping device for the same purpose.

Of course the adoption of these cars will not remove every element of danger from the attacks of desperate men, but it will lessen them materially; and an improvement which promises so much in the way both of protection of public property and of protection of life is worthy of full commendation.

COUNTRY, NOT PARTY.

One of the strangest developments of American politics is the completeness and the rapidity with which men and parties and policies are swept out of power, and opponents in party and policy are elevated to the control of governmental affairs. That these convulsions are the result of mature deliberation no one will pretend to say; they are so frequent that the mind of the masses is completely absolved from intelligent action in effecting the change. An appeal to passion or personal advantage is generally more effective than an appeal to patriotism, and within the past ten years democ- until has perhaps been more potent than either. The Democratic avalanche of three years ago, and the Republican landslide of one year ago and this year also, are less attributable to any other than to the latter cause; the party in power gets the blame for all the ills that afflict the body politic, and without knowing how or whence the remedy is to come, the people proceed to vote for a change under the common impression that any change must be for the better.

Where such is the motive there is almost [illegible] ...ously is to be expected. Nevertheless, as there seemingly is no important action as to the appointment of the proposed cure. If the country suffers a period of depression under a revenue tariff policy, many are apt to think that relief will surely and swiftly come from a high protective tariff policy. Yet no man ever taxed himself rich, nor, on the other hand, did any nation ever deserve well of the world or his posterity by wasting his own opportunities, abandoning his own market, and scattering broadcast among competitors that which belongs and is necessary to himself. When times are hard and money is scarce, the great cure-all is held by shallow thinkers to be the manufacture of more money—greenbacks, silver, or what not, so that everybody may have plenty. Yet money is only useful in direct ratio with its purchasing power, and a wagonload of cheap money is less valuable and a great deal more troublesome than a much smaller quantity of good money; while on the other hand, the nation or the community that has not money enough—even of the so-called good variety—for the transaction of its legitimate business is necessarily cramped and unsuccessful in accomplishing what its resources and destiny would otherwise have made easy.

We might go on and enumerate issues, each of which from time to time is deemed all-important and which ever and anon is made to strut its brief hour before the public gaze, yet when put to practice it falls in some way where near accomplishing the benefits promised for it. But such argument is hardly necessary. We maintain, therefore, that the enactment of a high tariff law by the incoming Congress, if such a thing were possible, would not immediately restore full prosperity unless the latter were already at hand; just as we contend that the passage of the revenue tariff law two years ago was not responsible for the industrial depression which has since been prevalent, but which in its latest stages had even before that time made its appearance. We also maintain that the enactment of a free coinage law, if that were possible, would not permanently cure the money stringency and make everybody happy again. These are only instances in a country's history; such doubtless has its effect, and this is more or less lasting. But the United States of America is no longer a "one-idea" nation, and its weal or woe cannot be materially affected by any one issue, especially where the two leading parties, with their very slight differences in political creed, are so nearly balanced in power. What the country has needed, and what it has lately had with a vengeance, has been a day of settlement. Neither party's policy could have postponed that day very long—for the time lost cannot be [illegible] and on the other hand neither party's policy could have long postponed the recovery—the resources and energies of the Republic are too great to be restrained by the politicians and their hobbies.

Pursuing this argument to its proper conclusion, we come to the view that parties are given only probationary power; and the nation will be better off, and its legislation will be safer, when they fully realize the fact. Neither of them is the sole savior of its interests or the sole champion of its welfare; and neither has either the inclination or the power—at least not while patriotism is as plentiful as at the present time—to bring upon it irretrievable destruction.
