In the case of the Idaho Colonization & Irrigation company vs. Howard Sebree, in regard to the temporary injunction placed upon the sale of the Sebree ditch at the beginning of the term, the court at Caldwell, Idaho, on Wednesday, intimated that counsel for defendant would have to make a very strong case to get the injunction dissolved, and that, in order to protect the interests of a large number of farmers under the ditch, it might eventually be desirable to make them parties to the litigation. Tiro and Juan Gonzales, two brothers, merchants, were killed at the Gold Cross mining camp, Cal., thirty miles west of Yuma. The tragedy occurred Monday evening in a saloon conducted by Sam Wilson, the murderer being a prospector named Johnson Randolph. Mulcahy, a miner, and the Gonzales brothers were at the bar drinking when Randolph walked into the saloon. Mulcahy, in an altercation with Randolph, accused him of stealing a man out on the desert some time ago. He was told by Randolph to drop the subject and not refer to it again, whereupon Mulcahy became very abusive, and was struck in the face by Randolph. Instantly Tiro Gonzales whipped out a six-shooter and fired twice at Randolph without hitting him. The latter drew his pistol and shot Gonzales in the stomach. Juan Gonzales, who took the pistol from his injured brother's hand, leveled it at Randolph and pulled the trigger twice. The cartridge failed to explode. The man Juan fell, with a bullet through his heart, from the pistol of Randolph. Tiro died twelve hours later.
