W. P. Ross, who acquired a fortune in the sheep and cattle business in Elko county, Nevada, has just died of pneumonia. The Independent says his estate is valued at from $100,000 to $150,000. He willed $1000 to the Presbyterian Church at Elko and $500 to the Sunday school.

The police of Sacramento, Cal., have been notified to arrest Edward Norman, formerly a member of the Salvation Army in Berkeley. Ed Harrington has come near perishing in the snow on a trip from Yellowline, Idaho. The Sunday winds had drifted the snow very deep at the point of the mountains. At a ten foot drift his horses fell down and during a blinding storm he had to unhitch and roll the horses over each other down the hill for a hundred feet. The sleigh was full three hours in extricating themselves from what appeared certain death.

A Mexican named Dolores has been fiendishly murdered in a wood camp near the Yarnell mine, at Prescott, Arizona. He has been employed cutting wood for the mine, and with seven or eight other men had been paid off the day previous. He and another Mexican named Trinidad Avino left the store where the men were paid prior to the rest of the men. On the return of the men to the camp blood was found on the rocks and the two men were missing. The dead body of Dolores was afterwards discovered, but Avino has not been found and is supposed to have killed his companion and fled.

A ghastly find has been made four miles down Green river, Utah. A prospecting party found and brought in a portion of a man's boot, with the ankle and foot bones. These are believed to be a portion of the remains of C. D. Creede, of Denver, who disappeared from here last summer. He registered at the Palmer house June 27, and the following day started alone and on foot for the oil springs located a few miles down the river. Creede claimed to be a mineralogist in the employ of Senator Tabor and a brother of the leadville Creede camp. He had a good appearance, was well supplied with money and was about 45 years old, of light complexion and had a sandy beard. A careful search of the vicinity has failed to reveal further finds.

Deputy U. S. Marshal Weaver of Buffalo, N. Y., has arrived in San Francisco having in custody Tong Sing, Yong Peng and Yung Ing, Chinese who were remanded to China by the United States court in New York. These Chinese landed in British Columbia, worked their way across the continent and on October 25th they attempted to cross the Niagara river in a boat. Customs officers caught them as they were about to land below Lewiston and charged them with evading the exclusion act. For this they served terms of thirty days in the Buffalo prison and afterwards were remanded to China. They made a strong fight to be remanded to Canada, as that was "the end whence they came," but the courts held otherwise. They will remain in the city prison until the next steamer sails for the orient.

During the big flood of February 22, 1891, which caused the breaking of the Walnut grove dam at Prescott, Arizona, and in which about eighty lives were lost, a safe belonging to Robert Brow, containing $7,000, was washed down the stream. A search was continued for several months, but no trace could be found of it, and it was given up long ago as lost. A man named Russel has just reported to Brow that he had found it and would take him to the place for $500. The money was put up to be paid on condition that the safe would be found unopened, and the two men left this morning to look for it. A twenty horse-power boiler was seen recently that had been carried twenty-two miles by the flood. It was about fifteen or twenty feet higher than the natural channel of the creek, and was about 100 yards from the stream.

A special to the Denver News from Rico Cliff, Col., says: Brush creek, in Eagle county, has come to the front lately with the discovery of a cave, whose extent will surpass anything yet discovered in the West, and in the United States, except Kentucky's wonder. Six hours of constant travel are necessary to view its grottos, forests, domes and mineral veins. Unfathomable depths still remain for wise explorings and judging from hear echoes and the far away rushes of the torrent which sound comes faintly to the ear, the mysteries unattempted will furnish multitudinous wonders, more gigantic rock halls and more exquisite grottoes. The passages and rooms never several miles of ground, but are intersected and paralleled in such a manner that they are compressed in one mountain, whose surface does not indicate the empty caverns. Centuries of percolation from the lime surroundings have wainscoted the place and in some of the rooms not a inch of rock can be found for several hundred feet. The most vivid fancy could not create unless for the numerous fantastic formations of deposited stalactites and disguised columns which cling or edge the ancient nooks of the different chambers. The cave is on Brush creek, one and one-half miles from Fulford.

French and German Politeness.

In England, one of the titles of nobility are limited and cannot be usurped by fictitious characters without detection; they confer a degree of consideration upon the possessor far superior to what is observed in foreign countries, where they are abundant to an extreme anywhere every needy adventurer can assume them. A German baron, in division, on a recent occasion a few days since observed to a French marquis that the title of marquis was very common in France, "I," added he, "have a marquis in my kitchen." "And I," retorted the Frenchman, who felt insulted, "have a German baron in my stable." The reparties were particularly happy, it being well known that German grooms are so common out of their country as are French cooks. It affords a just lesson, too, against the folly as well as rudeness of all national reflections.—Magazine Journal.
