EVENING NEWS.

HEWITT'S SPEECH ON THE SCHENCK CASE.

Washington, 25.—Hewitt, in his speech on the Emma mine case said: The materials furnished by the evidence served to show how the ambassador of the United States so forgot his high station that he not only consented to become a director of the company, proposing to sell its shares in the country to which he was accredited, but allowed his name and the official title of

AMERICAN MINISTER

to go forth in the prospectus as voucher of its unexceptional character; how by subscribing publicly for £10,000 of the stock, apparently upon the same terms as other subscribers, but in reality upon a private arrangement previously made with the vendors, in which he put no money at risk, and was absolutely guaranteed against loss, the envoy of the great republic placed himself in the attitude of a puffer at an auction sale; how he speculated in the stock of the corporation which he had thus helped to create and direct; how he seemed to be incapable of drawing a distinction between an investment and a speculation; how he associated one of his secretaries of legation in these speculative operations, and availed himself of the services of the other to watch the fluctuations of the stock market and practically act as his broker for the sale of shares; how he records his opinion that it is a proper thing, not merely for an ordinary man, but for an American minister to sell stock short, that is, to

SELL WHAT HE DOES NOT OWN,

and expressed his regret that he did not do so and indemnify himself against loss by transferring it to some one else not in possession of the information which he had received through private sources; how he so confuses his accounts of profit and loss that he cannot separate the profits, which he actually did or might have realized out of his original transaction with Park with the losses which he made in the speculations in the stock, having no relation to the transaction with Park; how he accepts credit upon the note which he had given to Park, the nature and origin of which he had no knowledge whatever, except that they arose out of transctions wherein he was at no risk; how he declines further credits of the same character, because he thinks that the limit of favors has been reached; how he arrived at this conclusion only after the public press had been filled with hostile criticism; how his memory as to the mode of payment for the second allotment of shares leads him in London to swear that Park did not provide the means for the payment thereof, and how before the committee, when it had been clearly shown that these means, he retracts the statement made in London; how on the final settlement with Park he transfers to him in payment of indebtedness the stocks upon which he continues to draw the dividends; how on leaving London he is forced to plead his diplomatic privilege as his defense against the service of a writ in a civil action growing out of his unfortunate connection with this disastrous undertaking, and how, finally, he reiterates his inability to comprehend the false and unfortunate position in which he is placed before the public by a series of ill-advised transactions, in which it is charitable to regard his memory as at fault and to look upon him as the victim of designing and unscrupulous men, leading and persuading him to an equal ruin of reputation and purse.

PARK DID PROVIDE

STEWART'S SHARP PRACTICE.

These materials serve to show how William M. Stewart, senator of the United States, while acting as counsel for a client who had placed his interests unreservedly in his hands, and with whom he had arranged for a contingent fee which should have made him all the more jealously to guard the interests of his client, became a purchaser of that interest at a time and under circumstances when he could have computed its value with almost mathematical certainty, at a price which gave the client $150,000, which was practically the contingent fee, and gave to the counsel the larger sum of $275,000, which should have gone to the client; how this magnificent sum, which was paid by Clark to Stewart, was not in pursuance of any express written agreement, but in accordance with an unwritten understanding, apparently based upon a sentiment of honor, which has been formulated into the English language; how the legal redress wisely secured by law to the client under such circumstances was cut off by a further payment of a later date, which Stewart stigmatizes as blackmail, and a release secured as a summary of the whole transaction as a legal curiosity and a model form for lawyers who desire to secure protection from their clients it is well to preserve. Thus was secured immunity from the claims of his client, but not from the impartial judgment of the legal profession and the world.

A PICTURE OF TRENOR PARK.

Finally, these materials serve to show how Trenor W. Park, member of the American bar and president of a national bank at North Bennington, Vt., and well known to the American public for his connection with the Mariposa company—whose disastrous failure some years ago will not soon be forgotten by those who suffered—the great author of this mischief, with a skill which never has been surpassed, going to London an entire stranger, but having carefully prepared the way by a large shipment of ore and glowing accounts of the production of the mine, within one short month secured the services of Albert Grant, the greatest manipulator of speculative shares of modern times, agreeing to pay for these at a rate of compensation which may be small for him, but which in this country of primitive notions would be deemed magnificent; how he provided in the contract for sustaining the market pending the allotment to the purchasers of shares at

FICTITIOUS PREMIUMS,

so as to gather in the money of bona fide investors—a process said to be usual in England, but which here would be regarded as little short of robbery; how widows and clergymen and half-pay officers and others living upon annuities were thus induced to invest their scanty capital, in hope of securing permanent dividends at a high rate out of an enterprise said to be unexceptional by the American minister; how Park intrigued himself into the confidence of the American representative at the court of St. James, so that within two short weeks he felt an irresistible desire to shower benefits upon him, and to relieve him from the embarrassments arising from his large expenditures out of a narrow official income; how he inspired the minister with that charming confidence which accepts favors without suspicion that they are to be requited, how he issues a prospectus containing statements calculated to persuade the most wary, but which turn out to be in mournful contrast with the actual issue of the enterprise; how when he was about to lose, by the resignation of the American minister, the mainstay upon which he relied for the sale of the remaining half of the shares of the company which had been tied up for a time, he procures a letter which was declared to be in effect better than to have the minister remain as director, wherein his character is reindorsed and the

GREAT VALUE OF THE PROPERTY

reaffirmed; how everybody who could assist or injure the successful perpetuation of the sales was conciliated by "pulls," as the senator from Nevada sarcastically describes them, upon the funds collected from a confiding public, so that about a million dollars was expended in the preliminary expenses of which the great American banking house of Jay Cooke & Co. got a "pull" of $125,000; how, when doubts had begun to arise as to the continued productiveness of the property before the reserve shares had been sold, he procured the services of the vice-chairman of the company, Bridges Willyams, to make a personal examination of the mine by the payment of £5,000 and a call for or right to take two thousand shares of the stock at a price at which the call could only be profitable to the examiner, as the result of a favorable report; how the favorable report was made and the reserved shares were sold at a premium of

THREE POUNDS PER SHARE;

how when the public supposed these were still tied up for months to come, they were all sold within two weeks of the receipt by telegraph of the report; how even the astute and accomplished Albert Grant was induced, by a process which no man can find out, to abate his claims for one-half the profits, and accept one pound per share in lieu thereof; how he was induced to give up his just claim of £2,000 commission on the stock which had been allotted to General Schenck, and how the same was credited on Schenck's note to Park, falling like manna from heaven; how Park bought and sold the shares through Clark, and devious courses were pursued, coming out at the end with a profit even; how when the shares were selling at over £30 a piece in London, he bought out his partners in New York at less than half that price; how at the shareholders' meetings in London, which he attended,

EVERYTHING WAS MADE LOVELY

for everybody, so that no one appears to have any legal ground against him for indemnity, although dividends ceased after thirteen months and the shares are now selling at twenty five shillings a piece; how the whole business is now involved in litigation on both sides of the Atlantic, so that Park declined for fear of consequences to put his accounts upon record, or to testify as to the amount of profit which he realized for the sale of the shares; how libel suits are pending against newspapers who have ventured to express unfavorable opinions in regard to an operation which has caused a greater scandal in the business and diplomatic world than any transaction of modern times, to the spectre of which the author of its being, Trenor W. Park, triumphantly exclaims: "Shake not thy gory locks at me; thou canst not say I did it." All this and more of the same unsavory sort can be learned from the perusal of the evidence herewith submitted.

Rocky Mountain Pills

A VALUABLE MEDICINE,

From New and Rare Medicinal Plants recently discovered in the Rocky Mountains!

PURELY VEGETABLE.

FIFTEEN years of earnest botanical research among these mountains and valleys have resulted in the discovery, not only of many new varieties of plants, but of new species, some of which have wonderful medicinal curative properties. By continued experiment their virtues have become known—and thus from extracts of these newly discovered plants are these pills compounded.

If properly used, they will cure very many diseases, pains and aches, and are more especially valuable in DYSPEPSIA, LIVER COMPLAINTS, INDIGESTION, JAUNDICE, and all cases of FEVERS, COLICS, URINARY AND KIDNEY DISEASES, RHEUMATISM, COSTIVENESS, HEARTBURN, DIARRHŒA, MUMPS, MEASLES, for PURIFYING THE BLOOD, and for many other diseases, and all cases of BILIOUSNESS and DISORDERED STOMACH.

On orders accompanied by the cash or postal order, I will send safely by mail, postpaid, 1 box Pills for 25 cents; 1 dozen boxes, ($2.50); 1 gross boxes, $24.00.
