Burglars in Evanston.—Cutting Affray.—Burned with Molten Metal.

Denver News—Trinidad, Colo., Sept. 21.—This afternoon at 3 o'clock the westbound Santa Fe express at the Nevada street crossing struck the wagon driven by D. F. Burt, demolishing the wagon and instantly killing the driver. The crossing is only a few hundred feet from the passenger station and Mr. Burt's body was sent flying through the air at a height equal to that of the smokestack. He struck on the side of the head on the track and scarcely moved after he fell. A violent gale was blowing and a cloud of dust covered the track, and the engineer, Mr. Bailly, says he saw nothing but the man flying through the air. Burt was 51 years of age and leaves a wife and a family of children; the latter are all grown. He was much liked by all who knew him as a hard-working, respectable man.

Davenport, Ia., Sept. 21.—The breaking of a bar at the foundry of the Eagle Manufacturing Company this afternoon as an iron crucible was being swung on a crane from the furnace to the moulds, sent the ladle and its contents, 1000 pounds of molten iron, to the ground. George McCoy, a laborer, was standing almost beneath the ladle when it dropped, and some of the molten metal fell upon his head. His hair was taken off in a broad strip running down the back of his neck from the crown, and his neck and head were burned to a yellowish color where touched by the fiery liquid. He was badly burned about the head and body, but it is believed that he will survive the accident. Other persons had narrow escapes.

Evanston Register—Some time during Monday night burglars entered the postoffice through the back part and left unmistakable evidences that there is, or was in Evanston, first class professional safe-cracking artists. The partition in the rear of the postoffice completely hides the safe as well as the interior of the office from view, so that once inside the building the robbers had it all their own way. The burglars were evidently supplied with diamond drills and understood the make of the safe, which is an ordinary fire-proof with an interior burglar-proof compartment, and stands about four and a half feet high. A superior visited the office yesterday morning and found a neatly drilled hole immediately to the left of the combination, through which some instrument must have been inserted and which with the assistance of a sledge hammer knocked the lock away from the combination so that the bolts responded promptly to the outside knob. The burglar-proof compartment was not molested. There were in the outer compartment about $900 in stamps and some $7 in money, but the burglar overlooked about $230 in stamps and only got away with $129 worth with the loose money. There is absolutely no clue to the burglars so far.

Yesterday about 1 o'clock a disgraceful cutting affair took place at the house of Hetty Wade, a woman of questionable reputation, who has been passing as the wife of Henry Wade. It has been impossible to learn full particulars of the affair, but it is presumed that a quarrel over the woman between Jack Howard and Henry Wade, her alleged husband, was in progress when Wade threw a razor down at Howard, badly bruising his head. Howard grabbed a knife and slashed it across Wade's throat, causing an ugly wound on the left side, from which the blood flowed freely. The wounded man was taken to Dr. Hocker's and an examination showed that one of the branches of the carotid artery had been severed. The participants are all in jail awaiting a hearing before the justice.

Preserving the Complexion.

A great deal can be done towards having a fine and smooth complexion, by a systematic treatment of rubbing, says The Ladies Home Journal. A fine towel or a bit of red flannel are best for rubbing, twice a day, or four times, if rapid results are to accrue. By degrees—as the skin gains tone and elasticity from having thrown off the waste matter in the ducts that kept it clogged sickly and—the friction can increase in energy. The skin becomes, not tougher, but more resistant. If the rubbing is too hard at first, however, it is liable to produce redness and pimples. Even slight friction will do this at times on an unaccustomed skin. But the treatment should be persevered in nevertheless, and the skin soon becomes fine and smooth.

Beecher's Early Habits.

Young and impulsive, ever ready to respond to the wishes of those who took pleasure in his society, and "thinking no evil" of those around him, it was singular that Henry Ward Beecher was never tempted to participate in many of the indulgences of the day, so common among all classes at that time the same as it is today, writes Mrs. Beecher in the first of her reminiscent paper in the October Ladies' Home Journal. But, as a young man, he was unusually free from any bad habits. He never smoked, nor used tobacco in any form, either as a boy, youth, or full-grown man. He never indulged in a drop of liquor. His language was as pure among his companions as when in a parlor. He rejected all indulgences. As a young man he never played cards; indeed, he never knew one card from another. He avoided all these habits in his later years, although he had no prejudice against the playing of cards for others—if played for amusement and at home. After coming to Brooklyn we both learned to play backgammon. It was a quiet game, and he said it helped him to a good night's rest, if his labors during the day had excited him so much as to threaten to retard his usually sound sleep.

AN ENGLISH TOURIST.

HE HEARS A STORY OF HOW HERMIT MOUNTAIN WAS NAMED.

An American Commercial Traveler Tells a Strange Yarn About the Lonely, Lovesick Miner of the Selkirks—The Mountain Was Named for Him.

The train had stopped near the heart of the Selkirks, under the shadow of a great bare crag, which the guide book said was the Hermit mountain. The rock rose almost precipitously, culminating in a crest extending for hundreds of feet to the north, and the top of the crest seemed almost as sharp as a razor. With arms akimbo on the rail of the observation car was an English tourist, who wore a monocle and a stare, and seemed very much bored by the scenery. Near him stood a commercial traveler of Toronto, who was explaining how the mountain got its name.

"Follow the edge of the mountain from its front to the rear," he said. "Right where the edge breaks off you see a solitary pyramid. From here it seems to be only about six feet tall, though in reality it is about thirty feet high. Don't you see it bears some resemblance to a man? That is the hermit, and it is this solitary pillar that gave name to the mountain."

The English tourist suddenly showed indications of interest. He edged a little nearer, and remarked:

"Beg pardon, did I hear you say something about a hermit?"

The commercial traveler gave his comrade a dig in the ribs. "Why, yes," he said to the tourist, "didn't you ever hear the remarkable facts about the hermit here?"

"No," said the tourist.

A DRUMMER'S STORY.

"Well, I'll tell you the story," said the drummer. "It's a remarkable one, and every traveler ought to know it. You see, about the time of the gold excitement in the Fraser river country 'way back in 1858 a man came here to make his fortune. One of the miners had brought into this wild region his little family, and among them was his daughter, a very pretty girl, with whom this other fellow fell madly in love. He had a hated rival, of course, and in a few months this rival carried off the prize, and his became a hollow mockery to the disappointed lover. He became not only a woman hater, but a hater of his kind, and he made up his mind he would spend the rest of his life as a hermit.

"So he came to this mountain, and he clambered up that break that you see alongside, and he built him a hut of stones and branches, and there he began his new life. He had a gun and lived on what he could shoot, a little flour he got from the settlement and the berries and roots he gathered. He lived that way a good many years, bringing down from the mountain an occasional fur or bearskin, which he sold for provisions. For years now he has been old and unable to hunt well, but nothing has ever induced him to give up his queer life."

By this time the English tourist was all eyes and ears. "You don't mean to tell me," he said, "How on earth does he live now?"

"Well, once a week the people who live in this little hamlet you see here fill a basket with provisions and one of them takes it up to the top of the mountain. When the hermit hears anybody coming he leaves his hut and retreats into the woods. The man with the supplies leaves the basket at the door, and the next fellow who comes up with provisions leaves another basket and takes back the empty one.

THE TOURIST BELIEVED IT.

"The hermit never speaks to anybody. Early in the winter, before there is danger of a big fall of snow, a lot of provisions is taken up to him, for fear that a heavy snowfall will prevent any one from reaching the top."

"Why, doesn't he get sick and need a doctor sometimes?" asked the tourist.

"Nobody knows that he ever had a sick day. He is old, but he's well. You see the air up there is magnificent, and there's no reason he should be sick. There he is now," continued the drummer, in a state of wild excitement. "There he is, near the edge of that rock. Don't you see him?"

The Englishman looked, but could see nothing. He borrowed a field glass and was adjusting the focus when the man exclaimed:

"There, he's gone. I just caught a glimpse of him. He's up so high he didn't look bigger'n a speck, any way."

"Remarkable," said the Englishman, as he lapsed into a seat. He rolled it all over in his mind for a couple of hours. Meanwhile the story of the Englishman's interest in the hermit had been told to a number of choice spirits, and there had been much hilarity. One of the men who shared the fun was standing near the Toronto drummer, when the English tourist sidled up to him again.

"Now, look a here," he said, "honest, is that really all true about the hermit?"

"Certainly, it's true," said the commercial traveler. "Most all tourists know it, and any one who lives in this country can tell you all about it. Ask this man here."

The Englishman turned to the other man, who told the story of the hermit over again, with some graphic and circumstantial additions. The Englishman will probably prepare an account of the wonderful hermit for the British press.—New York Sun.

The Habeas Corpus Revised.

A peculiar scene was enacted in the court house recently, when, under a writ of habeas corpus, a child was produced by its grandmother, and the court decided that the father was entitled to his offspring. When the grandmother heard the decision she hastily pulled off the dress the child wore and said, "You can have the child, but you can't have her clothes." A lawyer who was listening said that the proper legal phrase would have been, "Habeas corpus, non habeas vestimenta."—Brooklyn Life.

Flying Machines.

Professor Le Conte, in an article on flying machines, made use of the following argument: "There is a limit of weight, probably fifty pounds, beyond which a bird cannot fly. Obviously, a self raising, self supporting and self propelling flying machine to carry a man is impossible." And yet, pterodactyls or flying lizards of much greater weight than fifty pounds existed in early geologic times, and they were self raising, self supporting and self propelling.

A Hint to Young Writers.

We all know how to talk. There is a certain number of words put on the tongue of every human being, just as the song is given to the canary bird or to the robin. But beyond the song these birds cannot go. And beyond the natural speech, or the words that nature gives to every one, the illiterate human being cannot go. His vocabulary is limited until he becomes a student. Then he begins to widen and there is no near boundary line to its possibilities. The writer who imagines that he can give additional emphasis to a composition by the use of large words is greatly mistaken. The economy of the reader's attention is absorbed in understanding and applying these big words, and there is little of the mental energy left with which to digest the idea that these long words contain. The picture that is brought before his mental vision is therefore dim and uncertain.

If the writer would give more prominence to the idea and less to the verbal forms, in other words, if he would use simple language which by contrast would bring out the idea, he would not only economize his reader's mental energy, but would benefit himself by making himself more easily understood. The mind is not able to do more than one thing at a time and do it well. It cannot at once delve into the mysteries of a many syllable word and comprehend the thought in a proper manner.—Chicago Post.

The Cobra and the Empty Can.

The terrible cobra de capello, which is feared and venerated in India as a snake god, occasionally caught napping when he has encroached on the territory of aliens.

A resident in India says that he was one day much astonished by hearing a succession of reports, like the firing of a revolver, which issued from the "godown," or storeroom. As he opened the door a strange sight met his gaze. A cobra had managed to get into the room and had been attracted by an empty biscuit tin—in American parlance a tin cracker box—about 12 by 8, in which some crumbs were still remaining.

The cover had not been well opened, and the edges were jagged. The cobra had pressed his head inside to lick up the crumbs, but he could not get it out again. The more he tried, the more difficult did it become.

In his rage his hood expanded and was lacerated by the sharp edges of the tin, and upon this he began to lash about with his tail. Pop, pop, went bottles of champagne and beer; these were the reports which had been heard within, and they had given the signal which brought his executioners to the spot.—Youth's Companion.

This constant bearing of the weight on the left foot makes it wider than the right, and it often happens that a man who tries on a shoe on the right foot and gets a close fit has to discard the shoe altogether because he cannot endure the pain caused by the tightness of the left. If when riding on the street car you will take the trouble to notice, you will see that in laced shoes the gap is much smaller on the right foot than on the left, while with button shoes the buttons have to be set back ten times on the left shoe to once on the right.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

From the 13th to the 18th of November this year the greatest event in the history of the W. C. T. U. will occur. This will be the meeting at Tremont temple, Boston, of the whole world's W. C. T. U. Immediately following this will come the national convention of the famous temperance organization. It is expected that at this convention the antibustle-corset-highheel-skirt crusade will be entered on with characteristic feminine vim and vigor.
