from the programme already announced. The significant question will be the one prominently mooted. The Education committee, feeling the necessity of consolidating the issues, is conservatively for the Salvation's acceptance of the eight hour principle in the form of local option. Several Liberal associations have already seen fit to record in favor of the restriction of the hours of labor wherever a decisive majority of workers desire the restriction.

Emperor William has offered the German Squadron, with or without the aid of the British or French vessels, to enforce the diplomatic representation on the Chinese government. The French foreign minister proposes a joint demonstration at Tien Tsin. The Chinese Embassy here has received absolute assurance from Berlin that the Chinese government is able to repress the anti-foreign upheaval, and is ready to offer reparation.

The theosophic fad is vanishing as it is born. The pseudo Colonel Deemond, who accepted a challenge of $1000 to demonstrate the existence of Mahatmas and produce supernatural phenomena, cannot be traced. The wives of Mme. Blavatsky have been divorced into three parts, one portion being kept here, another being sent to Madras, and the third being placed in an asylum in New York.

The Baire des Choines Railway Scandal.

The general authorities were unanimously sustained by vote of the people.

The Stake authorities were presented, showing some changes. High Councilor Joseph C. Bentley, because of absence from the Stake, was honorably released, and Elder George F. Whitehead was nominated to fill the vacancy. Stake superintendent of Sunday schools John T. Woodbury, having accepted a call to teach school in the north was, with his assistants, honorably released, and Elder Richard Morris was nominated as Stake Superintendent, with Robert G. McQuarrie and John Morton Macfarlane as his assistants.

The list of Stake authorities, as amended, was presented and sustained by the assemblage without a dissenting vote.

The spirit of instruction copiously rested upon the general authorities present. JAMES G. BLEAK, Stake Clerk.

ST. GEORGE, Sept. 14, 1891.

The Dower of the Czar.

A most interesting article in connection with the Holy Coat exhibition has just been published in a Munich journal. The sacred vestment, tradition says, was originally presented to Tarsus by St. Helena, who was the wife of Constantius Chlorus, and mother of Constantine the Great, who was born in the year 274 and died in Nicomedia about the year 337. Some historians have said that she was a British princess. When her husband was made Cæsar in 292 he put her away and married Theodora, stepdaughter of the Emperor Maximian, though in his will he acknowledged Constantine, his son by Helena, as his sole heir. On assuming the purple in 306 Constantine took his mother to Treves and gave her as residence the imperial palace and the title of Augusta.

There she endowed and erected a number of churches, and at the age of 79 she made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where she discovered the true cross and the entire garment now exhibited in Turin. The article referred to adduces as proof the fact that in the year 1306 Ludwig Sforza witnessed scenes where in the Tyrol a executed "Hunter Bill" performed by peasants, which had as its subject the life of this queen St. Helena.

Much further discovered by author to have been a "peasant Shakespeare," a clumsy humorist who, in the play by the Inn, who had been both at Brixlegg, another place famous for its plays, and who died somewhere about the year 1810. He had taken the outlets of his drama from ancient chronicles, fables and legends, such as are found in the short apocryphal gospel of the pseudo-Matthew. He had written dramatic versions of "The Four Children of Hannon," "Doune Melanie," "The Beautiful Magelone" and a score of others. He wrote easily and quickly.

When a peasant actor took a fancy to any particular character or subject he wrote a play about his pet, or rather in the clumsy larger, or the original story as he had found it, and in two or three weeks he received it back to all the glory of a five or seven drama. Such a play was by Sforza was "Helena, the Daughter of the Mighty Emperor Antonius of Greece, or Revenge, Repentance and Reconciliation," in which the life of the illustrious lady is given in the scores of many quite dramatic scenes.

The Girl to be Avoided.

(Detroit Free Press.)

She is the girl who takes you off to one corner and tells you things that you wouldn't repeat to your mother.

She is the girl who is anxious to have you join a party, which is to be "a dead secret" and at which hundred people are very free and easy, you are uncomfortable and wish you were at home.

She is the girl who tries to induce you, "just for fun," to smoke a cigarette, or to take a glass of wine, and you don't know, and possibly she doesn't, that many of the sinners of to-day commenced their first one "just for fun."

She is the girl who persuades you that to stay at home and eat your food over, to help mother and to have your pleasures at home are where the simple people can see them, is stupid and Philistine; and that sneaking the afternoon waiting up and down the street, looking at the windows and the people, is more delightful."

She is the girl who persuades you that flung a wifty, that a bird dress that attracts attention is "artistic," and that your own simple gowns are dowdy and unsuitable. She is the girl who makes you feel how many women have gone to destruction because of their love for fine clothes.

She is the girl who persuades you to be on very familiar terms with three or four young men as an evidence of your charms and fascination, instead of being, as it is, the most conclusive sign of your perfect folly.

She is the girl who persuades you that it is a very smart thing to be referred to as "a gay girl." She is very much mistaken.

And, of all times, she is the girl who, no matter how hard she may try to make you believe in her, is to be avoided.

THE GREAT SHOW WINDOW.

The Free Drug Exhibit in Town and What the Patients Have to Say.

Within the past few years there have been some notable changes in the manner of carrying on certain industries in this city, and to a great extent the show window has taken the place of the interior and enlarged apartments of the shop. Perhaps the strength and weakness of quality goes as much to and known quality of some in the article exhibited, as one of his pictures which a man in Broadway, and as an advertisement of it, placed a little Irishman upon it and in Edison money to sit all day long sunning in the show window, where he attracted the gaze of the multitude.

Humanity is the Irishman and not humanity of a single work in the future language, he was forbidden to speak to any stranger while on duty under penalty of instantly being discharged. This was probably the evil of not man as an advertisement in the show window in this house.

But now scattered throughout the city there are hundreds of places in which industries are actually put in the show windows, ready to the delight and pleasure to the instruction of the minds that gather to observe what is going on. The new manufacture in this way can always count on the undivided attention of the passers-by, although it is not likely that they will make much money through their desires, since not only actual purchase is made, the time being generally only supposing one.

There was a time when business men had their show windows only for the display of goods were or had had in sale. The manufactured article was taken, but not the article in the process of making. Now the shoe maker is the workshop, and all along the business streets of New York one may be seen through plate glass leaving great chunks of indigested leather over iron blocks and creaking their big thick shoes with a dexterity that would be the despair of the hundred country men that ever went to a village cobbler.

Laundering is done under the public eye with such ease as makes a man wonder how it is that his wife never generally come back to him hopelessly crushed and mangled and mangled. Cooks and the possibility of further severing. Men sit in show windows all over town illustrating the way in which cigars are made, but it is noticeable that they never stick the small end of a cigar into their mouths just before giving the final touch to it, as is the constant practice of men who twist behind back windows where they suppose they are unobserved.

So, also, hats are dented, and the boxing dazed equine unbounded amusement in the breasts of the crowd that gathers to see the process, and even the public mending of boots and shoes is a source of delight to the multitude. Tailors sit in their shop windows, making clothes, and the shoemaker, machinist, griddle cake baker, laundry under the eyes of all who pass, artificial teeth are made where all can see the work done.

When the 1st day of January draws near the show window explains how skilled persons with New Year's cards, and it is not long since, in an up town street, seven Northwestern ladies stood in full view knitting their hosiery and every trance as neatly and where of the wonderful power of a certain hair invigorator. Also, in a show window in Broadway, a man might be seen, not long ago, sawing away for dear life, while another pulled for all he was worth, and a multitude gazed, for nothing, through the window of a machine.

Good, in the show windows.—New York Sun.

How the Prairie Looks.

Have you ever seen a western prairie? If not you might enjoy being there for a month in summer. As on the ocean, so on the prairie, there is usually a breeze to partly compensate for the lack of shade. Most prairies are slightly rolling or hilly, having somewhat the appearance of a sea with heavy waves, and occasionally, extending one of those low swells, there is a piece of young land. Sometimes, however, not even a clump is visible for miles and miles.—Monroe Thompson in St. Nicholas.

An Orderly Conversation.

A man, a cow and a pig sat in a Chicago parlour. The man lighted a weed-stick. The cow quietly chewed her cud. The pig "lying low" took himself to the corner to the cow. That was an apparently innocent and harmless combination, but it came near proving the death of the man. The cow, prompted to doubt by his cigar, actually approached the pig, who took a step to the cow. The man supposed he was the object, discharged his cigar into the pig's big white side, the surprised pig exploded.—Forest and Stream.
