Ancient Voyagers.

MONUMENTAL RECORD OF A VISIT OF PHENICIANS TO BRAZIL FIVE AND A HALF CENTURIES BEFORE THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

There are good grounds for the belief that a remarkable historical discovery has just been achieved in Brazil, no less than an engraved stone, bearing a Phenician inscription, commemorating a visit to Brazil some five centuries before the birth of Christ. Visconde de Sapercahy, a member of the Emperor's Council of State, received three months ago a letter from Parahyba, inclosing a drawing of the inscription upon a stone which the writer's slaves had come upon during their agricultural labors on his farm, and which drawing had been made by the writer's son, a young man who could draw a little. This copy was turned over to the Historical Society of Rio, and by it to Senor Ladislao Netto, director of the Rio Museum, for an examination. On examining it he was surprised to find that the characters were pure Phenician.

I will now quote from the letter of this gentleman:

After immense labor I have been able to interpret this inscription with such good fortune that only two or three words have proved beyond my powers.

The inscription is of a commemorate stone—a rough monument erected by some Phenicians of Sidonia, apparently exiles or refugees from their native land, between the ninth and tenth years of the reign of a King named Hiram. These wish or unfortunate Canaanites—the patronymic which they have used to denominate themselves—left the port of Azlongaber (now Akaba), a port upon the Red Sea, and sailed for twelve (?) novilunes (lunar months) along the land of Egypt—that is, Africa. The number of vessels they had and the numbers of males and females composing the adventurous expedition are all set forth, these particulars being placed intermediate between the invocation—one at the beginning and the other at the end of the inscription of the Alonim Valonuth—i.e., gods and goddesses, or superos superasque, as is the Latin translation by Gesenius of those well-known Phenician words. The inscription is eight lines of most beautiful Phenician characters, but without separation of the words, without the vowel points and without quiescent letters—three great obstacles to the interpretation, for whose overcoming a mere knowledge of Biblical Hebrew is insufficient.

A certain aramism, not slightly manifest in the emphatic termination in aiph and in the feminine one in thau, and more than this the forms of the letters mem and shin, induce me to believe that the reign of the second of the two Hirams was the epoch of the adventure, and that the voyage was, therefore, made in the years 543 and 542 B.C.; that is, twenty-six years after the siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar and four years before Cyrus reigned.

The inscription does not declare which of the two Phenician monarchs is referred to as the Hiram of the epoch. The first Hiram of the two historical ones was the Hiram the ally of Solomon, and he reigned in 980 to 947 B. C. The second was an obscure prince who reigned in 558 to 552 B. C., under the pressure of Babylon and Egypt. But whichever the one this inscription is one of the oldest and evidently the most notable record yet discovered in relation to the heroic and enlightened people to whom, it would seem, the whole of the seas were known.

Leaving apart trifling matters, I will proceed to treat of the crossing of the Phenicians from Africa to Brazil. To explain this crossing, of which they themselves appeared to be unaware, I have resorted to the beautiful and classic studies of Maury on oceanic currents, and I gather that the same happened to our Sidonians as did to Pedro Alvarez Cabral 2,000 years later, when knowing nothing of Brazil, he found himself unexpectedly off its shore. The only difference is that Cabral sailed from north to south, while the Phenicians voyaged from south to north. Like Cabral, in fleeing from the storms reigning from the Cape of Good Hope up to near Senegambia, they steered into the high sea, and seized by the famous equatorial current, which sometimes flows with extraordinary swiftness, they unexpectedly came upon the Brazilian shores.—Rio Janeiro letter to the New York Herald.

BREVITIES.

The Independent suggests that those who are eager for new things should try the neuralgia.

An injury is frequently done to the cause of truth by the manner in which some men attempt to defend it.

Sir Boyle Roche said "Single misfortunes never come alone, and the greatest of all possible misfortunes is generally followed by a much greater."

Dignified Clerk—"Are you going to marry yourself?" Facetious Patlander—"Arrah, now when did iver ye hear tell of a gintleman marrying himself? Shure there's a lady goin' to be married along wid me."

"That duck, sir, is a real canvasback," said Jones' landlord at dinner. "Canvass all through, I should think!" muttered Jones, as he laid down his knife in despair after trying for the third time to saw through a section of the ancient fowl.

An unconscious play upon words was made the other day by a little girl while relating to a sympathizing lady the loss of two pet calves:

"What caused their death," said the lady.

"Oh," was the answer, "one was hooked to death, and the other died on its own hook."

A young Englishman, a comparative stranger in the country, and unable to get work, recently called on a minister for assistance. He was a Unitarian, and had letters from an eminent clergyman in England. The minister heard his story and replied: "You have come to the wrong shop, I ain't a Unitarian any more. You must get your money where you get your religion."

A young man becoming a little dissatisfied with the coquettish actions of his young lady while she was shopping, retired to another part of the store, and resting his elbow on the dummy figure of a woman, gave himself up to gloomy reflections, from which he was rudely aroused by a sharp push, while the dummy received a vigorous slap over the head from an indignant lady's parasol. There is hardly enough of the English language to do justice to the scene that followed.
