A TALL YARN.

ALLEGED REMARKABLE DISCOVERIES BY A RUSSIAN CONVICT IN SIBERIA — MAMMOTHS, WOOLLY HORSES AND SEA MONSTERS.

[CONCLUDED.]

Cheriton describes the mammoth as being a very imposing looking animal, covered with reddish-brown wool and long black hair. During his stay in the valley he was close to five of them, all of which were nearly of a size, beign about twelve feet high, eighteen feet long, with tusks projecting about four feet, and being eight or ten feet counting the curve. The skin, which was bare on the upper surface of the ears, on the knees and rump, was of a mouse color, and seemed very thick. The animal was nocturnal in its habits, frequenting caves or forest depths by day, and feeding at night and early morning. Cheriton thinks there might be some fifteen or twenty of these monsters in the valley altogether, but that all these are aged, and that very few are born nowadays. At any rate, he saw none that had the least appearance of being young. They were very peaceable animals, torpid and sluggish as old oxen, never disturbing Cheriton, nor indeed took much notice of him.

Batchmatchnick found a small cave which he could climb up by the face of a perpendicular rock, and in which he was comparatively free from the incursions of wild animals. In a recess of this cave he built his fire, which he never suffered to go out again during the whole course of his stay in the valley, which continued all winter and until about April, as nearly as he could guess the time. In all his stay there, so sheltered was the valley and so permanent the warmth that seemed to be nursed there by radiation, that the lake was never frozen over, nor was there any more than an inch or two of snow, and no frosts sufficiently bitter to destroy the succulence of the grasses. These were fed by repeated gentle rains, constant dews, and frequent mists. The valley swarmed with animal life, while, as the winter progressed, the waters of the lake were literally covered with wild fowl. Birds of prey fed upon them in numbers, while the foxes, lynxes, gluttons and wolverines preyed upon the herds of deer and smaller tribes.

Batchmatchnick explored the valley thoroughly during his stay there—a stay which was entirely enforced from the fact that he could not, after repeated endeavors, make his way out of the valley through the ranges to the eastward, and to go back by the pass through which he had entered would have been simply lost labor and lost time. In the course of his explorations he encountered many animals indigenous to the valley, which he thinks are not known to exist elsewhere except in the shape of fossil remains. Among these were a species of horse, a wild and beautiful creature, that went in droves and ran with lightning-like speed. These horses were small, pure white in color, with long black mane and tail; they were covered, however, rather with fleece than hair, and in running looked as much like llamas as horses. The lake was full of fish of many species, but was inhabited by a monster of which Cheriton was in constant dread, a sort of sausophidian, which he described as being thirty feet long, and armed with scales and horrible fangs. This monster—he never saw but the one—was master of the lake, and lived by devouring the animals which came by night to its brink to drink. Cheriton gives a graphic and exciting description of a contest which he witnessed one morning at early dawn between this crocodile-serpent and one of the mastodons. The battle, which lasted more than an hour, ended in the discomfiture of the mammoth, which could hardly limp away after having been constricted in the serpent's folds. Doubtless, in respect to these and similar discoveries, Cheriton's book, when it appears, will be one of the most interesting narratives of adventure ever published.—Ex.

EASTERN NOTES.

Miss Margaret Van Allen, a beautiful girl of nineteen years of age, was buried to-day. Two years ago she became a clerk in the dry goods establishment of Muscovitz & Russell, University Place, from which she honorably retired to accept a better position. Soon after it was ascertained that goods had been bought of A. T. Stewart & Co. on a forged order of Muscovitz & Russell. After the firm had arrested several girls and had been unable to prove anything against them, they caused Miss Van Allen to be arrested a week ago Saturday afternoon. They placed her in a cell in the Charles-street police station and kept her locked up until the next morning. Miss Van Allen was then taken to the Jefferson Market police court, where she endured for nearly three hours the horrors of the prisoners' pen and the society of the vilest of the city; but as there was not a shadow of proof against her Justice Cox released her on her own recognizance. She went home and was taken down that day with jail fever, of which she died. Her death causes intense excitement throughout the city. In the funeral sermon to-day the Rev. Mr. Rhodes pronounced the death sheer murder.—N. Y. Correspondent, July 30th.

An overland traveler writes to a Milwaukee paper, long complaints of the dangers incurred from gamblers, thieves, and desperadoes throughout the entire journey. He says:

"Their operations cover the whole field, spotting along the steps of persons leaving San Francisco, and by means of the telegraph and other agencies only known to the initiated, the desperadoes along the line are advised of any 'game' that may be passing over the road. One gang, numbering from four to ten, usually rides only from one station to another, when they are relieved by others, one, however, remaining quietly on board all the time for observation."

The leading business men of St. Louis have held a meeting and resolved to adhere to the rules of the Merchants' Exchange of that city, requiring that in future all mercantile transactions shall be on a cash basis. It was agreed that, on and after the 15th of July all sales shall be for cash, (unless otherwise specified,) and all bills shall be payable on delivery of the property sold, or a warehouse receipt therefor. Chicago is holding its breath to see if St. Louis will act up to its loud sounding manifesto.

A doctor in Lowell, Mass. is excited upon the subject of rowing, and he writes to a Boston newspaper, that "half a worse than cholera is in the whole thing. One man gave out from congestion at Springfield; one died at St. John. More will be taken sick; cases now in that way without rupturing the heart and congesting the lungs, with a score of minor ailments. Let the college faculties prohibit rowing at once. They have got to do it. There is too much excitement in the world."

A wealthy New York man of original turn of mind is going to have stables built upon his grounds after the model of the pyramids of Egypt. He argues that the pyramid is the proper form for dwelling-houses, also, and has the advantage of putting a quietus the eternal discussions about [illegible] and other room.

Amulets, as averters of evil, are coming into vogue among men of fashion. Many of the latest knacks, such as petrified toads, rattlesnake rattles, gilt or bronze owl's claws, etc., are furnished by a Bohemian sorceress in New York, who warrants their infallibility.
