HAPPY WIVES AND HOMES.

Upon the outside cover of Madame Demorest's Fashion Monthly there is an illuminated advertisement surrounding the following bit of precious information, to-wit: "The way to make your wife and home happy: Send a year's subscription to this magazine, and you will obtain an economical and useful household assistant, and a friend that will enliven and beautify all your social surroundings."

To prove this a delusion and a snare, one does not need to go back of the page on which it appears. To the left of the advertisement is a full-length wood cut of a young lady in a resplendent costume, which, including a marvellous array of hair, must have cost a thousand dollars. Standing by her side is a lad of some dozen summers, in a faultless suit, and a most excruciating attitude. Thirty dollars might cover the expense, not including the mannish airs. This is an inviting tableau to the father, with small means, of a large family of sons and daughters. It must be some relief to read below that these are "Horton suits," "Ladies' demi-train skirts," a "Zerlina over-skirt," and a "Mignon basque." If there is anything which would soothe the mind of the family head after a day in the counting-room or workshop, it would be to be confronted with just such a picture.

The last page turned back, the parental eye is bewildered with a maze of "Childrens' Fashions," any one of which involves considerable expense. The climax of despair is reached in view of the magnificent full paged illustrations of ladies' suits. The Queen of Sheba in all her glory was not more gorgeously arrayed. Here are suits which would cost a man a year's salary. Either child's suit would embarrass a poor man to pay for. But it is not so much the price of these articles which is objectionable as the air with which they are paraded to meet the wants of an economical and useful household. They are not intended for anything of the kind. It is a combination of shoddy-serving individuals backed by rich people who are determined to draw the line by the luxury of dress, if in no other way, between the rich and the poor. Such extravagant displays are not only beyond the reach of the poor, but they are calculated to drag down to want and wretchedness the large and respectable class of families with moderate means. The evils of social extravagance would not be so alarming if they were confined to the rich, but they react upon every ramification of society, doing most harm in the circle of moderate livers which immediately surrounds the "bloated aristocracy." Unfortunately the love of dress grows by what it feeds upon and it arrives at such a pitch that comfort, honor and often life are sacrificed. The doctor gives it a different name, but there are plenty of men, and women, too, who die from exhaustion in the vain struggle to meet the extravagant demands of their families. The subject admits of an endless range of discussion, but we confine ourselves to the display of unattainable richness of dress. In this connection it would not be inappropriate to descant upon "openings," as fashion displays of millinery and dry goods are named. We once heard a lady say that an American watch was invented to vex the soul of a woman, and we believe if there is a greater cross it is a spring or fall opening. If any one doubts it, let him take a view of the countenances of the majority of women as they survey the ready-made garments of a first-class dry goods establishment. There is not the same emotion visible in examining an assortment of raw material. The ladies enter upon the field of modiste triumph with a flush of expectation sadly at variance with the assumed air of indifference. Having taken in the minutest detail of a splendid suit they turn away with a sigh of envy, and by the time they make the circuit of a dozen brilliant costumes an expression of discontent has settled upon their faces. We leave it to the husbands of two-thirds of the ladies who visit an opening if the evening of that day is passed in as unalloyed enjoyment as any other in the half year which intervenes between these periodical aggravations—to women whose wants exceed their means. A great many ladies who know their weakness stay away from such places altogether. It is the only way they can possess their souls in peace. We would not advise any of this kind to subscribe for the delicate, rose-tinted magazine before us. We are very well satisfied it has more discouragement than comfort in it, and we have done our part towards putting it in its true light.

As a sort of supplement to the illuminated recipe for making a wife and home happy, Madame Demorest advertises "Bristable Patterns," an "Excelsior System of Dress Cutting," "Stocking Suspenders," a "Health Corset," "Lily" and "R seate Bloom" for the complexion, "Shoulder Braces," etc., enough to satisfy every need of American wives and daughters. The prices we observe are not on a scale to suit purchasers of moderate means, invariably being higher than in the home market.

If all our women were prudent in their desires, these remarks would be superfluous, but there is a large class who err from want of thought, and upon such a few homely words on the subject of dress will not be thrown away. To dress within one's means is the aim of every sensible person, and what makes it the ultimatum of good taste and self respect is the fact that no mystery can be preserved in regard to one's circumstances. If the income returns do not show it, there is always some curious body to ferret out the truth, and hold one up to ridicule and contempt. The lesson can not too soon be taught that dress does not make the man or woman either. With half the money spent on extravagance of attire there might be twice the refinement and five times the comfort now enjoyed by the unhappy victims of fashion who are racked and pinched and in debt because they affect a style of dress above their means.—Indianapolis Journal.
