PORTUGUESE BEGGARS.

ALWAYS READY TO CHANGE YOUR MONEY AND KEEP A TRIFLE FOR THEMSELVES.

At Braga, a few miles from Oporto, is a temple, dedicated, I believe, to the sun, and leading up to its principal entrance there are 365 steps, says a letter from Portugal. At each end of a step there is generally a beggar. Every beggar prides him or herself on some horrible deformity, which is exposed so as to present its most hideous aspect to the view of the unfortunate pilgrims to the temple.

Having heard beforehand of this ghastly spectacle, I determined not to go beyond the human mollusciums which creep about the city of Oporto. They are absolutely a dangerous institution, and might almost be said to occupy the position of money-changers to the general public. Their method of begging is peculiar. When they espy your approach they begin a long prayer in a vigorous sing-song voice. They start in something like this style: "Hi is in your excellent house's power to be thankful for your sown riches and mindful of the wants of others. Deigs shall fall your hand. The man shall follow your doorstep every morning. Amid the malmed, the deformed, the stricken in every fault. I am change 100, 200, or 300 reis at your excellent house's pleasure." Then follows a curse or blessing, according to the manner in which you have responded to their supplications.

You may give one of these creatures almost any piece of money, and he will return you that sum in small change minus about half a farthing with complete satisfaction. Indeed, he will think he has done a good morning's work. Whenever I went out I made it a rule to place a few coppers in a certain pocket to present to those objects of distress and ward off as many maladies as possible. One day I plunged my hand into the wrong pocket, and, without examining the piece, gave it to a trunk possessing only a left arm and an incomplete cranium. The fragment set up an uproar and a crowd collected. I was summoned back, and, with wild gesticulations, was presented with a 200-reis piece. I thought it was too late then, so I bowed and shook my head in token of thanks. On Tuesday, the 6th day of October, 1891, at 8 o'clock p.m., will be sold at Rockwell & Wells' house, 30 to 36, West Fort, Constitution Block, Salt Lake City, Utah, Territory, the following personal property, to wit: The interest of the estate of Mr. John Dancason in the Deseret Evening News Company.

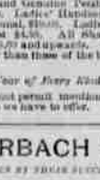
THE CRY OF MILLIONS



OH, MY BACK!

STOP IT NOW, GOOD IF WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and medicines without relief. Some one recommended me to try Electric Bitters, and I was induced to try them. When I commenced using them I was in a very bloated condition from dropsy and could not walk a mile without resting. My kidneys were in such a condition that I was bent over. When I commenced using Electric Bitters I could not go to my door, or to the office. Now I can walk four miles and feel tired only a little. My appetite is good, and I can eat anything I want. The dropsical swelling has left me, and I feel like a new man. I cannot say too much in favor of Electric Bitters.

Eggs in a Bottle.

If an egg be kept in strong vinegar for a short while the shell will become quite soft and pliable, and the egg can then be pulled through the neck of a bottle of such enough diameter to go with ease to the mouth of a beer bottle. If cold water be then poured in the bottle, the shell, the life of which has been enlivened by the vinegar, will harden and return to its original shape. —New York Sun.

It must be evident even to the youngest minds of a school that, as the world now is, the person without knowledge must take a low place in the industrial scale. He can be nothing but drudge, unable even to handle the tools which a workman of high grade is entitled to use.

Gold coin is shipped abroad in Brequilon, unalloyed cotton bags. Each bag holds ten bags, and each bag contains $2,000, so that the value of a bag is $20,000. Gold from the other mines usually comes in bags.

The black suits of Patagonian Boys brought are made into necktiues and neckties, and are worn by the Brahmins and also put around the necks of children to keep them in health and to ward off disease caused by evil spirits.

To battle and return at once to duty is a loss of power which the effects can never justify. Time the evening is to be preferred to the morning bath and the warm water rather than the cold.

The Great Sealing.

The scallop eating public is well acquainted with the ordinary small one-I-pecker, but know little about the oyster neighborhood, generally designated as "the giant." Fishermen in oyster societies use queer names for all marine creatures, and so to the Patagonian man a scallop is a "ben chow." Along the coast from Hatteras to Labrador there are ordinary scallops, but off the coast of Maine alone are the big ones. It is the largest edible mollusk on the Atlantic coast, but big as it is it pales before the huge albino mollusks of the Pacific.—New York Times.

The Great Answer.

"If that is your final answer, Miss Rebecca," the young man said, with its accustomed elegance, as he picked up his hat and turned to go, "I can do nothing but submit. Yet has it never occurred to you that when a lady passes the age of thirty-seven she is not likely to find herself so much sought after by desirable young men as she once was?"

"It occurred to me with sudden and painful distinctness when you offered yourself just now," she replied. "Good night, Mr. Jones!"—New York Ledger.

A Rebel Home For Horses.

One of the most striking features of the Fort Collins Fair last week was the outer parade on Tour day. The procession was headed by a string of twenty Cleveland boys belonging to Jesse Harris, famous on the southwest as an importer of these grand horses. A scene of the most Cliphanic nature in Colorado, attached to a $300 farm wagon, led the procession. This wagon is a Rockford and was sent to California by the boys at the Fair. In the wagon were two Rockhouses dressed in the wild costume of the Highlands, and how! enlivened the parade by playing on bagpipes.

Jesse Harris is admirably well prepared to carry on the horse business at Fort Collins. Right in the vicinity of the town he has a farm of 320 acres, fenced with outlawed boards painted white. Rows of stately trees adorn this farm and water is supplied by pipes to each of the numerous 10-acre inclosures. It is the home farm of Mr. Harris, and a handsome brick house under the trees is his dwelling place. Alfalfa grows in the paddocks and high-bonded horses pasture there during the mild days of a Colorado summer. It is a charming country and this home farm of Jesse Harris, and it is well worth visiting by any one desiring to see a model farm.

But Mr. Harris' main farm is the livestock, a mile north of the town, where the great barn and the many box stalls are located, and it is there the horses are housed. The stalls are beautifully shaded place, with flowery dells, white alfalfa meadows and pastures. A clear spring of crystal spring water flows through the pastures and the irrigating system is probably as complete and adequate as any in the west. Everything about this farm indicates thrift and prosperity. It is capable of growing a thousand tons of alfalfa annually and the Cleveland Bays always have as much alfalfa as they can eat so long as they are boarders at Interbeck.

It is the intention of Mr. Harris to make Salt Lake Bee in the form of Fort Collins. He is in better position now to engage his business than ever before. He has engaged Myron Akin as his principal man, and Eli Hunter remains as the best salesman. His sales in California last spring aggregated $50,000. He is said to be the best horse salesman in the west, and he has gained an enviable reputation by his honesty of dealing and true representations of his horses to patrons. In fact it was in this way that Jesse Harris has done business all the way through, and by that course, supplemented with pluck and enterprise, he has made a fortune in the horse importing trade.—Ex.

A Sure Rule.

De Cumm—Is there any sure way to tell the age of a horse?

De Twelver—Yes. Ask the dealer and multiply by one-half.

The railway mail service began on Aug. 28, 1864, when postal cars were run on the Chicago and Northwestern road from Chicago to Galena.

The advancement of such a ridiculous, childish idea as the belief, by a man claiming a perfect knowledge of the heavens, is certainly astounding. Why, if such a battle force—119,000 men—should wend their way, marching for twenty-four hours, they would not possibly throw off more than six thousand cubic feet of moisture, and if this amount of sweat would produce such fall or even disturb the "equilibrium of the atmospheric conditions," the population of New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, with the thermometer 104 degrees in the shade, would keep the storm clouds standing water all through the summer. Yes, the truth is astounding and shows, with many others, what jumps at conclusions the visionary theorists who have studied the outlaw of one side of a question only and refused theory rather than science.—Ex.

PRIMITIVE WHALE KILLING.

INDIANS IN WASHINGTON CAPTURE SEA MONSTERS IN THEIR BARBAROUS FASHION.

Last Friday, as the schooner Robert Lewers, Captain Donaldson, from Honolulu, was entering Puget Sound, says the San Francisco Examiner, she passed five canoes filled with Indians, who were attempting a whale in their primitive style. The harpoons are fitted with a socket, into which the harpoon shaft of iron, five feet long, is inserted. A lanyard about five fathoms long has one end fastened to the harpoon head and the other end secured to a long staff which usually is made of cedar, with the bark still on. The intermediate by the dippers and neck are closed up air-tight, except that the neck has a bolster wooden plug, through which the Indian blows up the skin while fresh and soft till it is full of air, and when dry it is as rigid as a drum and as buoyant as a bladder.

In attacking a whale the harpoon is driven into the blubber with great force, and the staff of the harpoon comes out of the socket, leaving the barbed head firmly fixed in the whale's carcass, with the skin bag floating at the other end of the lanyard. The Indians get as many harpoons into the whale as they can, and the bags prevent his sinking. The Indians then tell the whale with lances through and when dead he is towed ashore and the blubber and meat taken off and divided. The Indians were sleeping and drifting, and finally the whale headed for the schooner, and passed directly under her bottom, bears and all, giving those on board a fine chance to see the circus. When the whale again came up the Indians were ready with their lances, and soon the water was dyed red. The schooner before the Lewers had got out of sight they had killed their huge game and all the canoes were fast to it, towing it ashore, with songs and shouts of victory. The Indian whaling business at Cape Flattery is one of the fishing industries of Washington. A full and complete set of their whaling outfit will make a very attractive addition to the World's Columbian exhibit at Chicago of the fisheries and of the state of Washington. The Indians killed six albino whales this season.
