Apache Indians on the Warpath in Arizona.

AY IDAHO RANCHER KILLED.

Mysterious Death of a Saloon Manager in Wyoming.—Alarming Accident on the U. P. in Colorado.

A couple of State University students, one from Laramie and one from Cheyenne, have been expelled for a little escapade that came to the ears of the faculty. A few nights ago they, with a third boy of about the same age, left the city for parts unknown. It is supposed they have gone to Denver.

Word has been received at Albuquerque, New Mexico, that Tomas Gallian Lucero is dying at his residence in the Lucero of dysentery. He is one of the best known Republican politicians in the Territory of New Mexico. He was a delegate in Congress in 1880 and has served three terms as sheriff of Valencia county.

Lafayette County, Wisconsin, is a fine agricultural district over a river which some years ago escaped from a travelling show and is now flowing about their neighborhood. Many cattle and sheep have disappeared and last week a great hunt was organized for the skin of the tiger. Dogs were taken in the chase and many of them were often found mangled and bleeding, but the tiger was not found.

A Mr. Yeargesen, a rancher of near Ardia, was instantly killed while driving into that town Sunday morning. He was alone at the time and the details of the accident can only be surmised. It appears, though, that while he was driving his team of four horses, he dropped a line and in reaching over the dashboard to recover it, lost his balance and fell under the wheel which passed over his breast.—Idaho Democrat.

Dock Hallander was killed at the Mary Murphy mine, Ouray, Colorado, on Sunday morning by drilling into an unexploded hole, which caused the explosion. Particular pity is due one who with him, his helper, being just married. Only for a week or two, and on leaving the explosion turned, finding Mr. Hallander by his side with his brains blown out and disfigured beyond recognition. Hallander was a prime favorite with everyone, popular, and bright and energetic. He has a brother and sister in Colorado, who has been informed by wire of the sad occurrence.

The Yosemite National Park committee, composed of Major Eugene F. Weigel, United States Army, in charge, Captain E. A. W. Rucker, U. S. Cavalry, Stanford, Guardian Yosemite National Park, and John A. Sigler, special agent from the general land office, have arrived in session for the purpose of adjudicating all issues on the government reservation, investigating as to the conditions of the roads which run through national territory and receiving bids for the privilege of erecting hotels and other buildings intended to provide accommodations for tourists on that portion of the valley and surrounding country that is reserved as a national park by the United States government.

Frank Zeiger, the ranchman who shot and killed Pierino Candelaria in Western Valencia county, New Mexico, was captured near Fort Wingate on his way out of the country by Deputy Sheriff Hubbel on Sunday and brought to the county jail at Albuquerque. His account is different to that already given. He stated that he repeated Candelaria to take his sheep off his ranch when he was shot at three times without effect. He then ran to his house, and fired over the head of his assailant only to scare him. Candelaria jumped behind a pine tree and was taking deliberate aim when he shot, sending a bullet through Candelaria's head between the eyes. Zeiger is quite an old man and has been a resident in the territory for a number of years.

N. H. Dodson, an attorney of San Jose, Cal., was publicly horsewhipped in one of the streets of that place the other night by Miss A. V. Page, his great-niece, who is a competitor on a newspaper. Dodson had gone to the office on an invitation purporting to have come from its owner, and was assaulted by the girl on leaving the place. He, it is claimed, had been making remarks derogatory to the good name and reputation of the girl. Miss Page recently secured a divorce from an adventurer named De Rampa, who claimed to be a foreign nobleman, but who was in reality a Quinan negro, and who tolled the girl into marrying him. She left him twenty minutes after marriage on learning his true character. It is said the remarks made by Dodson about this unfortunate occurrence in the girl's life caused the administration of the chastisement Friday.

The people of Aquilar, Colorado, were startled on the afternoon of Sunday last, at seeing Union Pacific engine No. 1227 coming up the main line with no one on her at full speed enveloped in steam with her cab torn almost entirely off, running into some cars before coming to a stop. Conductor Hood and Engineer Cheney had just left Aquilar for Chicago Junction with the engine and caboose. Half a mile east of the station the caboose, which was ahead of the engine, jumped the track and was thrown over a high bridge. The engineer reversed his engine, but was torn from his seat by the caboose shifting the cab, throwing him over the bridge and cutting his head in a horrible manner. Brakeman Minier was hurt internally and is not expected to live. Conductor Cole was standing in the side door of the caboose and was thrown out by the jar and only slightly injured. The firemen jumped and was not hurt. The accident was caused by a partly thrown switch.

Yesterday just after noon the dead body of Wm. Hollip, the well known manager of M. W. Dolan's Bank Exchange saloon, was found in his room with three fearful bullet holes in his breast, any one sufficient to have caused death, and a .41 Colt's six-shooter lying several feet distant with four chambers empty. The discovery was made by Herman Benton, the barber who runs a shop in the Bank Exchange building, who went to his room on the corner of Fourth and Court streets to call him. The door was locked and, not receiving an answer to his call, Mr. Benton went around to the side of the house and raised a window, looking in he discovered the prostrate remains lying against the door and Hollip's gun lying in the middle of the small room. He at once gave the alarm and Coroner Timlin was summoned. The jury's time was taken up yesterday afternoon and evening in examining witnesses and a post mortem examination will be held on the remains today. The motive for suicide remains a mystery. Certain it is that his friends thought his condition was such that he meant to take his own life.—Cheyenne (Wyoming) County Journal.

Those Apache Indians supposed to be the Kid's gang on their way back from Mexico into the reservation, were seen on Eagle Creek about six miles from Morenci, where they killed several Mexicans w ar range and took a Mexican along with them to show them the trail over the Turtle Cattle company's horse range and subsequently let him go, warning him not to say anything of they would kill him. The war party left Eagle Creek the 19th. On the 19th Bill Meyer and John Harbinger of the Turtle Cattle company started out to get up a band of horses for the roundup, and at a point on the divide between Eagle and Eagle creeks were shot and killed, presumably by the same Indians, for at the scene of the murder there were moccasin traces and a rawhide horse-rope found. A man named Ben Parker, on his way from Morenci to the Basin on the 20th, found the body of Bill Meyer near the trail and some back to report. Immediately a party was organized and the next day the two bodies were brought in and will be buried this morning. Bill was shot through the heart while in the saddle. Harbinger's horse was killed and Bill Meyer's was found covered with blood. Their saddles and arms were taken away, but it is not known how many Indians are missing. The Indian outrages are now among friendly Apaches on the reservation.

RANGE CATTLE TROUBLES.

Danger to Montana and Wyoming Are Increasing.

The area of the ranges is becoming more and more restricted every year. Not only to the area being gradually less and less, but the grass upon the ranges is being more and more eaten and trodden out, so that the ranges will not support as many cattle per acre as they did in years past.

Even when the cattle are confined the grass never appears so luxurious as it was twenty years ago, and the ranges are thoroughly overpastured, so continuously that it has had no opportunity to recover its old strength.

Under present conditions the half share of adult bull equivalent the owners of cattle are permitted to use any part of the public domain for pasture. One year he may graze his cattle upon one portion of the public domain, the next year he may graze his cattle upon another. If one cattle owner has occupied a certain district of country for pasture any other cattle owner can graze his cattle upon the same ground. The natural understanding and forbearance of cattle owners has also prevented serious difficulties between them. The differences between Absalom and Lot show that like troubles must occur when any pasture is overstocked.

The ranges of Montana and Wyoming are now overstocked. There is more danger to the cattle interests from overcrowding than from stealing. As the country settles up the danger must increase.

The question naturally arises, Is there no way of preventing the overcrowding of the ranges? If all our lands could be occupied by small farmers and stock growers in another generation the whole matter would be practically settled. But there must always remain large bodies of land which can be put to no practical use except for pasturage. The question is therefore a vital one and must be solved.

As the ranges become more circumscribed and the grass under the present system of pasturage poorer and poorer, conflicts must arise between cattle owners. These owners will not be able to agree to disagree, as did Abraham and Lot. The law must step in and make some regulations to preserve the peace between cattle owners and property in cattle, unless a valuable interest is permitted to be destroyed. The best plan, it seems to us, is for the state governments to be given control of the ranges and the officers of the respective counties, with proper supervision, be required to make such divisions in the range as the face of the country will permit, leasing the right of pasture in such divisions as they may choose to make for a term of years, and using the money so paid to pay to police the several counties so as to prevent any trespassing or injury to stock growing. Many such things cannot go on as they are now. Already owners of thousands of cattle are preparing to go out of the business, for they foresee disaster if it is to be continued as now conducted.—Montana Farming and Live Stock Journal.

How Questions and Answers.

"How much space is needed in yard for twenty-five cattle to almost enough to sell?"

A yard 8 by 6 feet would do.

"If you wanted to keep 100 head of common stock, slightly mixed with Hereford, Wyandotte, Cheshire and Holstein, what kind of make would you get for next year? I want both heifers and steers."

Use Brown Leghorns.—Stock Yards.

Tobacco is man's most universal luxury; the fragrant aroma of Mastiff Plug Cut starts people to pipe smoking, even those who never used tobacco before.
