LAND POOR.

I've had another offer, wife—a twenty acres more,
Of high and dry prairie land, as level as a floor;
I thought I'd wait and see you first, as Lawyer Brady said,
To tell how things will turn out best a woman is ahead.

And when this lot is paid for, and we have got the deed,
I'll say that I am satisfied—it's all the land we need;
And next we'll see about the yard, and fix the house up some,
And manage in the course of time to have a better home.

WIFE.

There is no use of talking, Charles—you buy that twenty more,
And we'll go scrimping all our lives, and always be Land Poor.
For thirty years we've lugged and saved, denying half our needs,
While all we have to show for it is tax receipts and deeds.

I'd sell the land, if it were mine, and have a better home,
With broad light rooms to front the street, and take life as it come.
If we could live as others live, and have what others do,
We'd live enough sight pleasanter, and have a plenty, too.

While others have amusements, and luxury and books,
Just think how stingy we have lived, and how this old place looks!
That other farm you bought of Wells, that took so many years
Of clearing up and fencing in, has cost me many tears.

Yes, Charles, I've thought of it, a hundred times or more,
And wondered if it really paid to always be Land Poor;
That had we built a cozy house, took pleasure as it come,
Our children, once so dear to us, had never left our home.

I grieve to think of wasted weeks and years, and months and days,
While for it all we never yet have had one word of praise.
Men call us rich, but we are poor—would we not freely give
The land with all its fixtures, for a better way to live?

Don't think I'm blaming you, Charles—you're not a whit to blame;
I've pitied you these many years, to see you tired and lame,
It's just the way we started out,—to plan too far ahead;
We've worn the cream of life away, a time too much when dead.

The Traveling Guillotine.

The French have instituted something new in the way of executions. They neither trust their criminals to inexperienced hands, nor do they call them from long distances, as Mrs. Bond did the ducks, "to come and be killed." As often as is deemed necessary the executioner, M. De Paris, packs up his guillotine and makes a round of the provinces. Whenever his aid is wanted he sets up his instrument and dispatches the job with that neatness and delicacy heretofore peculiar to the metropolis. We see by our foreign exchanges that he has just returned to Paris from one of the tours. During his travels he operated successfully in several most interesting cases; but perhaps the most thrilling drama, taking it altogether, was that which was terminated at Arras by the execution of Courcol. This misguided wretch slew his wife with a hatchet, and the chief witness against him was his own little boy, who saw the murder perpetrated, but who pretended to be asleep for fear of being assassinated also. After killing his wife, Courcol lighted his pipe and left the house, and the child then jumped out of bed and called to his mother, but she was dead. When the lad related this episode on the trial, the prisoner became furious, and said, "Little viper, I would have settled your business had I known you were awake." Courcol only indulged in violent invectives against the judge and the police. After the usual religious exercises had taken place at about half-past 3 p.m. the executioner and his assistants appeared, and commenced the toilet, over which, contrary to their usual custom, they bungled to such an extent that the prisoner could not help smiling and exclaiming, "Maladroit." When the time at last came for getting into the van at the prison door, Courcol hesitated. "Courage!" said one of the chaplains, but the unfortunate man did not move. A gendarmes pushed him from behind, and he fell on his knees. He was dragged thus far some yards, when two warders lifted him into the van, which started off slowly in the direction of the Champ de Mars, where it arrived about 4 o'clock. Then the execution took place in the presence of an immense crowd.

BREVITIES.

The latest argument for the narrow gauge is that the road to Heaven is built on the same principle.

Manton Marble's health is precarious, and he has been compelled to abandon editorial work on the World.

Two fierce Georgia lawyers recently cross-examined a colored witness until he fainted.

Rufus D. Connelly, of Terre Haute, married his eleventh wife recently. Rufus is of a domestic turn of mind.—Ex.

Coal is higher now in London than it has been before for forty years. In 1881 the price was about one-half what it is now.

Some of the Missouri farmers are feeding wheat, stacked before the recent rains, to their hogs, it having been spoilt by dampness.

"Bobby, why don't your mother sew up your trowsers?"—

"Cause she's at the vestry meeting for the heathens."

Not so bad—To print on wedding cards, "Please adapt your presents to an income of $1,800," or other sum according to circumstances.

Says the Danbury News: "Mr. Jones being asked by Mrs. Jones to buy a thermometer, said he would wait till they were lower."

A pious Newport woman refused to carry fish home in her hand on Sunday, and compromised the matter by fastening them to the wires of her hoop-skirt.

An exuberant youth of Pittsfield, spoke thus to a supposed friend:

"Hello, Zekel Oh! excuse me; I thought you were another man!"

Laconic stranger: "I am!"

Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), sailed on the Scotia from New York the other day. He is to make a tour of England, Scotland and Ireland, and will be absent about three months.

A Scotch lady has this year destroyed $5,000 worth of wine in her cellar on principle, but a great many persons with no principle at all have destroyed more than that.

One of those disgraceful demonstrations, a charivari, was given in "honor" of a newly married couple on Tar Oak St., San Francisco, lately. The indignant bridegroom responded with a salute from a shotgun, which had the effect of dispersing the musicians precipitately, and the neighborhood enjoyed its accustomed tranquility. Served them right.
