CAN BE PUNISHED SEVERELY.

This suggestive inquiry has been received by the NEWS:

SALT LAKE CITY, December 10th, 1895.

To the Editor:

Please answer the following: If a candidate for the City Council obtained a list of names of voters that were absent from the city, and paid other men money to go and vote those names, could he be punished for it? If so, what is the penalty? Please answer in the NEWS.

Not only is the candidate who would engage in such reprehensible proceedings as that stated by our correspondent liable to punishment for his crime, but those who would receive money and vote as suggested, if any there be, are guilty of a felony and subject to a heavy penalty. As to a candidate, or any one else, who proceeds as stated by our interrogator, section 4784 of the Compiled Laws, 1888, says:

Every person who procures, aids, encourages, assists, commands, or advises another to give or offer his vote at any election, knowing or believing that the person is not qualified and entitled to vote, is guilty of misdemeanor.

The punishment for this offense is imprisonment for six months and a fine of $500 for each and every person whose unlawful act is thus procured. Regarding those who receive money and vote in the manner named, section 4782 of the Compiled Laws, 1888, says:

Every person not entitled to vote who fraudulently votes, and every person who votes more than once at any one election, * * * or aids or attempts to aid, any ballot to be thus polled at any election, either by fraudulently introducing the same into the ballot box before or after the ballots therein have been counted, * * * is guilty of felony and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years, or by both.

If our correspondent, or any other person, has information of any proceedings of the nature suggested, it is his duty at once to notify the prosecuting attorney, who will set in motion the proper machinery for bringing the guilty parties to justice.

IS THE GRIP COMING?

A writer in the New York World calls attention to the fact that influenza is again raging in Europe, and that it is more than probable that the epidemic will find its way over to America, as its course seems to be westward. From Germany the disease has spread to Norway and Sweden, where the weather lately is said to have been very bad. In England a number of cases have occurred, and the conclusion is, therefore, probably but too well founded, in view of the previous history of the malady, that it is again on a globe-encircling tour.

The grip is one of the diseases which is but little understood, but that a damp and chilly atmosphere is favorable to its development seems to be established. During the winter 1889-90 the weather was unusually disagreeable, resembling that of the fall this year, with much rain and dampness, and penetrating winds. That it is due to microbes is also supposed to be demonstrated, but by what medium these are conveyed from one place to another is not entirely clear, although they seem to be present in the air everywhere, whether it is pure or not. In this respect it is different from the microbes of all other known epidemics.

As everybody knows, it is a very trying disease, often accompanied by excruciating pain. It seems to attack the nerve centers and benumb the senses, and it often leaves serious results for years. There is one feature about it, though, which is particularly noticeable, that it seldom proves fatal, except when persons with weak constitutions are attacked. A perfectly healthy person may not escape the sickness, but he has but little to fear from it. And this suggests the necessity of keeping the system in perfect order, by tonics and temperate habits, as the best means of prevention. This is, of course, always desirable, but especially so at a time when the country is, perhaps, liable to be visited by a fly so unwelcome a guest.

In the early days of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints the attention of the world was called to the fact that a time was at hand when visitations of various kinds would come over the earth, and among others, destructive diseases. But at the same time it was pointed out, in the Word of Wisdom, how the force might be kept in a condition of strength, so as not to be overcome by "the destroying angel." It is now half a century since that "word" was given, and there can be little doubt that had the people all this time acted accordingly, a physically and intellectually strong generation would have sprung up, prepared for what may come, now or later, in the form of various epidemics. For it was given for "the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days." It is worth while the careful study and consideration by all who may hitherto have neglected its teachings.

A WOMAN'S WEAKNESS.

Miss Barbara Aub, of New York, may be more closely against than shining, but her vacillation is calculated to cast some doubt upon the question. She was the complaining witness against one Walter L. M. Langerman, a Gotham man-about-town, accusing him of criminal assault. The case was brought to trial before Recorder Goff, who, at the conclusion of the evidence, roundly charged the jury in terms prejudicial to the "exquisite" defendant, and a verdict of guilty was soon rendered. Langerman steadily maintained his innocence, but his word was unsupported by other testimony; besides, his previous record was all against him, for his reputation was anything but savory. A week ago he was brought before the court for sentence. Then ensued one of the most sensational scenes that ever occurred in a court of this or any other country—a scene worthy the dramatic pen of a Sardou. Instead of sending the convicted man to jail for his crime, the order was made holding the woman witness in custody for perjury. She had confessed to the judge, who it appears had some lingering doubts that everything was not straightforward, that she had falsely charged the defendant—that in fact she was a willing partner to and had consented to the crime with which he stood charged. Defendant, attorneys and sentence were overcome by the extraordinary turn the case had taken—the situation was dramatic in the extreme.

Yesterday's dispatches, however, indicate that another scene is to be added to a play which it was thought had reached its denouement. Miss Aub is now reported as claiming that in confessing herself guilty of perjury she really committed perjury. Her present story is that the evidence given by her at the trial of Langerman was true and that the later denial of it to Judge Goff was and true. How she came to make the confession or why she did it she seems to be unable to tell. The matter will no doubt receive ventilation when the case against her is called. Meanwhile Langerman, by his own statements and here a libertine and a scoundrel, is pretty sure of escape from the penalty which the jury's verdict had prepared for him.

A GREAT AMERICAN PRODUCT.

One of the great lands of Utah shippers of fruit and vegetables, and perhaps of grain and stock also, is that the product they export is not always well-selected or in the best possible shape for the market. An inferior consignment is allowed to slip in now and then, not with any intent to deceive or beat the purchaser, but through negligence. A lapse of this sort can have but one result—all future shipments are regarded with suspicion or disfavor, if, indeed, the receipt of products from this source is not discontinued altogether. The warning against such costly carelessness has been sounded many times and loudly, and it appears at last that a greater degree of importance is being attached to the all-important subjects of culling, sorting and packing of goods.

A forcible lesson on the subject in its most extended sense has been given the corn exporters of the United States in a recent report from the agricultural department. In the markets of Europe they come into competition with the product from the Black Sea and the Danube countries, where cheap labor prevails. Experiments as to the value for feeding purposes of the corn produced in the United States, compared with that grown in southern Europe, have been made, and the advantages in this regard are all with us. The Roman product, and indeed all that is grown in continental Europe, finds a convenient market in Germany, Roumania and Great Britain, and has therefore the important advantage that a long sea-voyage is avoided. But this is more than offset by the superior quality of the American grain. The European samples are found to correspond in composition with the poor corn grown in the United States, being from 12 to 17 per cent lower in protein, and fully 35 per cent lower in fat than the average of more than 300 samples of corn grown in this country, though these include numerous samples of inferior corn and cannot be said to represent fairly the average corn exported. The department report on the subject says that while these data speak eloquently of the higher quality of American product in a manner lastly to the importance of maintaining the high standard of the feeding quality of American corn in foreign markets, as that is unquestionably the clear-cut statement upon which much reliance must be placed in enabling the American growers to compete successfully with the cheap labor of southern Europe. The shipment of inferior grades of corn under the circumstances would be a death blow to American corn exports, even to those countries where maize is used only as food for live stock.

THE QUESTION that for many days held Europe in breathless suspense seems now to be practically settled by the Turkish vizier, on representations of the Russian ambassador, prohibiting in near firmans permitting the European powers to send extra guardships through the Dardanelles. The situation does not seem to be materially changed, the powers still jealously watching each other. The prediction of the sultan that the forcing of a passage of the Dardanelles by British gunboats would be followed by the utter annihilation of the Christians by the Mohammedans in all parts of the earth will doubtless be found to have been one of those subterfuges the sultan and his advisers so ingeniously supply at every stage of the diplomatic argument that is going on.

DISCLOSING a cure room in the residence of a Chicago citizen, the Record of that city says it looks like a jungle, and supplies a picture. The reader will be disposed to agree, for the picture is inverted and stuffed tigers are represented as walking around on the ceiling.

NOT ALL the presidential candidates would have selected St. Louis as the place for the convention, but none of them but would about as soon be nominated there as anywhere—certainly rather there than nowhere at all.

"BOBBIE, WHAT is a school of pharmacy?" asked a Waterloo school teacher of one of his star pupils the other day. Bobbie hesitated only a moment—"A school where they teach farming, sir!"

THE BICYCLE trust's attack in the Cabinet or the Senate as yet, but it is a sore devoutee in the Supreme court, and another noted one in the person of Speaker Reed of the House of Representatives.

IF ENGLAND were only wise she would content herself with American bonds without bothering about American territory.

A CARPET-TACK trust is the latest, and the hostile partisan press want the department of justice to put its foot squarely down on it.

Remarkable Write Professional Experience

Henry Feldwert, of Lorain, Jamaica, West Indies Islands, says: "Since my recovery from an attack of dysentery, some two years ago, I attribute my constant use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy taken in a little water given me immediate relief. I could get a dozen testimonials from people in Jamaica who have been cured by this remedy."

Subject to Attacks of Chronic Diarrhoea

While staying in the Delta (Mississippi bottoms) last summer, E. T.
