A POOR REVENGE.

"I am going to have two guests at Elmdale the day after to-morrow," remarked Mrs. Radcliffe carelessly one morning to the old husband who adores her and who is fully thirty years her senior.

"Yes, my dear Ophelia," is the amiable answer, while Mr. Radcliffe stirs the coffee his wife has just made for him. "I am so glad to hear you say so. I was on the verge, my dear, of proposing some such social distraction. And pray whom have you hit upon?"

"You have met the lady, I am sure. She is Miss Eloise Bristow, and the gentleman is Mr. John Folsom."

Mr. Radcliffe considers this response for a moment, and then up go his gray tinted eyebrows in unmistakable astonishment.

"My dear, you must be making some mistake. I have heard you say some very hard things about both those people. I remember your being very angry indeed at Eloise Bristow just before your marriage for—for"——

"Can't you recollect why?" interrupts Mrs. Radcliffe in smiling interrogation. "This was my reason for being angry: Eloise chose to spread abroad certain reports about me when I was poor little Ophelia Radlow, which, whether they were true or false, concealed behind them the desire of preventing our marriage. You were sensible enough not to believe the gossip, and so she was defeated."

"But have you forgiven her, Ophelia? I thought not."

Mrs. Radcliffe's face is very calm and gentle in its expression.

... reminders that you could not have known anything about him."

Five days pass. During this time John Folsom and Eloise Bristow are much together. Each soon discovers in the other a charm which lies wholly apart from that which first brought them together in such close mutual attraction; but it is doubtful whether, except for certain spurious intelligence imparted by Mrs. Radcliffe, either of these two young persons would have had sufficient interest in the other's acquaintance to have made the delightful discovery which has now resulted for both.

Yes, Eloise Bristow and Mr. Folsom are thoroughly in love with each other at the end of a week's time. More than once, while thinking of how superbly her revengeful scheme had succeeded, Mrs. Radcliffe's eyes flash with malicious triumph.

At last John Folsom tells himself that he is foolish not to avow his love, since Eloise has given more than a single marked sign by which, if he cannot read the exact truth, he has at least had reason to guess it.

One day while passing the library door he catches the gleam of a pink muslin morning dress.

"It is she," he mentally murmurs, "and provided she is alone, I shall not leave her until I have declared the truth."

Eloise proves to be alone. Mr. Folsom seats himself at her side, and in a few moments has spoken words that bring the rich color glowingly to the girl's cheeks and make her eyes sparkle with brilliant fire. He finished with these humble words:

"I have no right to address you as I am doing, for oh, Eloise! even should you consent to become my wife the world would call me little else than a scheming fortune hunter."

A moment after the last words are uttered Eloise Bristow leaps to her feet.

"A fortune hunter!" she bursts forth indignantly. "I—I do not understand you, Mr. Folsom, unless you mean what you say for cruel satire?"

He rises now.

"Satire! Why, of course I do not. The facts are plain enough. My fortune is now a mere wreck of what it once was, and you are immensely wealthy."

A bitter, black sort of laugh leaves Eloise Bristow's lips.

"Did Mrs. Radcliffe tell you that—that I was immensely wealthy?" she asks excitedly.

"Yes."

Eloise sinks back into her seat. ...

BELLES OF THE BIBLE.

Much the Same Ornaments and Style of Dress in Solomon's Time as Now.

It is an interesting fact and to a great extent true that the style of dress and ornaments of the ladies of the present day is much the same as in the time of Solomon. With the many changes of centuries, the gradation of chignons and crinolines, much of the simple grace and easy symmetry of ancient Greece has taken their place in the Nineteenth century.

The Scriptures narrate a great many things about the style of dress worn in the time of Solomon. In the law of Moses directions are given concerning the garments worn by the Israelites. In the Book of Judges the girls of that period are described by Deborah as "a prey of divers of needlework."

Lemuel says, "Their clothing is of silk and purple."

In the frequent intercourse between the Jewish and other natives the ladies, tired of their primitive simplicity, sought the fashions of the clever Egyptians, the elegant Phoenicians, and the luxurious Persians. Even the patient Job became impatient at so much dressing and thought of the adornment of the person, and Isaiah denounces the "women of the period," living for nothing but dress and flirtation, with their great desire to "see and be seen."

The tunic spoken of in the time of King Solomon was very much like the polonaise of the present time. The belts and fancy girdles and clasps and buckles are the same thing as the leather girdles and silver buckles worn in the Bible times. We also find recorded the fact that trains were worn to dresses, and that camels' hair shawls were common among the ladies of that age. Embroidered mantles are also mentioned, and they were fastened with gold pins. The hair must have been quite elaborately dressed to judge from Bible descriptions, and many ornaments were worn. It was oiled, dyed and put up in rolls. Little curls were allowed to hang loose over the forehead, and strange as it sounds the young ladies of Solomon's time used paint to make their cheeks red.

Veils were worn, and the sandals ...

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed.
