F. D. RICHARDS,
JOSEPH F. SMITH.

IF IS DONE!

In the history of the people of God, as in the experience of individuals, there are periods of supreme joy and exultation; there are times when the mind is more than usually filled with the contemplation of things divine, and the spirit within feels the relationship with the Father above and the affiliation with the home beyond.

Such, according to the Scriptures, was the occasion when the Temple of Solomon was dedicated; such also was the occasion of the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost.

Such was the occasion, according to the testimony of living witnesses and of modern sacred writ, of the dedication of the first Temple in this dispensation, at Kirtland; and such was most certainly the occasion this morning when the grand and beautiful Temple in this city was dedicated unto the Lord of Hosts!

The Spirit of God filled the sacred building and touched the hearts of all present. It would be almost sacrilegious, as it would be quite impossible, to attempt to describe the emotions that the solemn ceremonies called forth. We shall make no such vain endeavor. Each must see and hear and feel for himself!

THE ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

The address of the mining and business men of this Territory to President Cleveland has the right ring to it. As it will be found in full in its proper place in today's NEWS, it only needs to be referred to here.

If ever a people were justified in calling upon the head of the nation for such relief as he can secure if he will, those of the interior West are so justified. The President has not been advised as to all phases of the silver question; and such that so far has formed or indulged have been those of the people who are not profiting but suffering in the handling of the white metal. There is a large profit to be realized out of unequal conditions, whenever if equality prevailed there would be wider distribution and consequently smaller profits for the few. He is an honest man and insists upon every dollar that is issued with the government's stamp upon it containing a hundred cents' worth of value; for this there is and can be no excuse, only pious, but we respectfully ask that it be determined by an impartial tribunal, and not by a select few committed to the continued demonetization of one of our circulating metals, what "value" under such circumstances means.

Anything that will effect exchanges and settle balances of account has value to that extent, but everything that will do this is not of necessity money. To be money it must have certain intrinsic qualities, such as gravity, density, imperpritibility, durability and so on, which together with the risk and expense attached to procuring it, invest such metals with what civilized man recognizes as an intrinsic value—a great deal of worth in a very small compass. Having sate metal, it is only necessary that, when there is another one, recognized as fit for the purpose, their worth with respect to each other be determined and then honor as authorized by law to make them the medium spoken of. Our Constitution recognizes two such metals and prohibits money being made from anything else—thereby saying without the use of so many words that one shall not be preferred to the exclusion or prejudice of the other. As Mr. Cleveland is devoted to the Constitution, let us hope he will give this branch of the subject some attention when making up his mind as to what constitutes an honest dollar. Let him consider that our forefathers and our people up to the time of the congressional injustice of 1873 found no difficulty in silver and no difficulty in the full use of it, as our institutions fill them provide!

Is it that we have become so much more honest and so much wiser that we have been compelled to put one of our former favored metals out of use? It has not changed as late; it bears upon it with the same smiling, wearing glow that has characterized it through all the ages; it is as incorruptible now as it ever was; it is as malleable, as ductile, as impervious to rust or corrosion, almost as scarce all things considered and nearly if not quite as hard to get as at any time since man first discovered its proper use; and yet it is no longer honest! How the human family must have progressed from the standpoint of the money changer! How much purer, and more scrupulous, and more exact, and more honest has the biped dignified with the name of man become than one of the other products of nature which never knew guile nor dissimulation nor the art of imparting deception!

The fact of the matter is, the outrage upon the great West and through it upon every debt-payer in the country has been borne in meekness and without complaint of any effective nature so long that those who originally conceived and compassed the sin of demonetization have apparently come to look upon themselves as being in the right after all. When Richard III was reviewing in a soliloquy a portion of his more recent and more bloody career, he is pained out several clever hypocrisies which had been successfully worked and the victims of which looked up to him with wonder and admiration, as though he were a patron and a benefactor instead of a tyrant and a monster. The thought of his success was uppermost and so elated was he that he finally exclaimed—"My word for it, I have mistaken myself all this time and am a marvelously proper man!" So with the superlatively self-it people who are most frequently met in Wall street and Lombard street, and who are so fearful of the whole world becoming corrupted through the use of silver as money. There is not much gold in circulation, comparatively speaking, and the most of it is controlled by the gentry spoken of. So long as they can make Congress do their binding they can buy silver as they would rig iron and sell it in the same way, realizing a profit with each transaction, and they have perhaps come to look upon such a constituting condition of things as perfectly legitimate and themselves as wise and special embodiments of the people's welfare!

One reason why this is an auspicious time in which to commence the agitation at headquarters is because the Forty-fourth Congress contains a majority of members in both branches who are fully committed to the just and patriotic action of restoring silver to its proper estate. The President alone stands in the way, but we do not believe he would do so if it could be made plain to him that no trickery, deception or dishonesty are intended. He is an excellent listener and a man not so "puffed up" over his exalted station that he will not listen to relevant and timely suggestions or requests from any one. The Silvers of our silver mess is not so verbose as to be unintelligible nor so terse as to cramp its meaning, and we hope that Mr. Cleveland will read it with interest, and give it full attention.

HUNT HIM DOWN.

The Grand Junction Star of a recent date relates a circumstance which, if not exaggerated in narration, has been permitted to pass by altogether too quietly. It is stated that some two months ago, when the San Juan fever was at its height, there came from South Dakota a young attorney named James Jerusalem, in quest of a fortune of course, as were all the others who went that way. One very cold night, while on his way to the mythical "diggings," a desperado named "Wild Bill" Johnson entered camp, compelled Jerusalem to dance, and then drove him out of camp. It has since been learned that Jerusalem was compelled to walk twenty-three miles to reach shelter, and in doing so froze his feet and contracted pneumonia. He has been wild with delirium most of the time since that awful night, until death relieved his sufferings. Three weeks ago the latter amputated the loss of both feet, and subsequently were compelled to amputate the right leg near the knee, gangrene being the cause of both operations. After driving Brennan out of camp Johnson shot and killed Rod Terwilliger, thus making two lives he is directly accountable for, the victims in both cases being guilty only of the crime of being called "tenderfeet," and yet, that paper complains, the authorities of Utah have thus far made no effort to bring the murderer to justice.

The scenes that particular scoundrel is hunted down and brought to justice, the better. If the sheriff or sheriffs in that part of the Territory are unable to apprehend him, they certainly know what course to pursue; and let us hope for the sake of the Territory at large and the people of that part of it in particular, there will be no further delay in taking Johnson and making him pay the full penalty of his crimes.

THE LAST OF THE LIBEL SUITS.

The case of James Peter Lochrie against the DESERET NEWS Co. came before the Third district court yesterday on the defendant's demurrer to the complaint. Judge Zane briefly reviewed the case and then announced that he could see no allegations of corruption in office or necessary implications to that effect; that newspapers have a certain latitude in the criticism of public officers and this is guaranteed by our institutions, but they must not abuse the privilege. He then sustained the demurrer, which virtually disposes of the action.

THE VALUE OF METALS.

There is an idea more or less prevalent that gold is the most precious of metals. In a certain practical sense this is not far wrong, but as a matter of fact it is greatly out of the way. There are several other metals which, by reason of certain peculiar and unusual qualities, are rated beyond gold in the markets of the world, as is shown by a recent list published in New York. Platinum, supposed by some few to be one of the metals outranking gold, is rated at about half as much, with the following rates per troy pound for metals worth more than gold: Barium, $1,867; calcium, $6,700; cerium, $4,700; chromium, $375; didymium, $5,857; erbium, $2,767; gallium, $62,200; glucinum, $1,875; indium, $5,857; iridium, $3,733; lithium, $3,733; osmium, $1,600; osmium, $700; palladium, $420; rhodium, $1,867; ruthenium, $2,052; rubidium, $750; uranium, $3,857; thulium, $825; thorium, $9,333; vanadium, $6,200; yttrium, $3,857; zirconium, $700. These prices are, however, the equivalents of quotations by the gram, and it is probable that for so large a quantity as a pound—if procurable—a considerable discount would be made. The utter inability to procure a pound at a time of such metals contributes toward their value in some cases.

THE CHICAGO Herald, the morning of election, made a vigorous appeal to the voters to support Allerton, the citizens' candidate for mayor, saying, among other sensible things:

If any voter, Democrat, Republican or Independent, will ask himself candidly what possible connection there can be between the nations issues dividing the great parties and the simple proposition of conducting a city business on business principles, he will see the worthlessness of the argument. Between the competitive suppose Mr. Harrison should bid you run your private business on partisan lines, selecting your employes, your clerks, foreman or salesmen, according to their party affiliations or their attitude on the tariff and silver questions. Would you do it?

Good sense, good logic and correct reasoning; and yet Harrison (Democrat) was elected by an immense majority.

THE Minnesota law to compel Chinamen to wear their blouses or white inside their trousers on penalty of having their queues cut off is a fitting suggestion to some crank Western legislator to demand that all men shall wear their pantaloons inside their boots on penalty of having their boots cut off. Fashion is inexorable enough without the aid of a city law.

FOTTOM DOWNEY NOTES—George Taylor's motion in relation to the Paper Mill, in the NEWS of last night, is good. I second the same with twenty-five dollars.
WM. J. SILVES.

There is no necessity for any one to be backward now. Keep the ball rolling!

THE Chicago Inter-Ocean became of age on the 25th ult. and celebrated the occasion by getting out an issue of sixty pages, including an illustrated colored supplement. It is one of the few great papers of the country and one of the most successful.

A TOWN in Kansas, Gerard by name, which has been sinning for prohibition during many years, lost its waterworks one night last week by fire. For success in the art of going "dry," this would appear to beat the record.

AS AN independent journal we are compelled to say the Democratic satisfaction cry about smashing the tariff has brought forth little but a postmortem anxiety to gobble the offices.

THE TREASURY DEBT stolen in New York brings to mind the phenomenal test of H. H. Pollock, Jr., of that city, who in five minutes "sent" 223 words.
