CANADA'S NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

OUR press dispatches have been heavily burdened during the last day or two with reports of the landing, reception and inauguration of the Marquis of Lorne as Governor General of Canada, in the place of Lord Dufferin who recently resigned. The details of the ceremonies would not prove very interesting to the majority of our readers; we therefore give only the most prominent particulars, and in lieu of the rest offer a few explanations and items of history relating to the new colonial ruler.

Lord Lorne is the son of the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, and the grandson, on his mother's side, of the Duchess of Sutherland. He was born at Inveraray Castle, County of Argyll, Scotland, in 1845. The Argylls are among Scotland's noblest peers, and belong to the clan of the Campbells. The playing of the Scottish air, "The Campbells are Coming," thus had peculiar significance in the reception festivities at Halifax on Monday. Lord Lorne's boyhood was chiefly passed in the neighborhood of Inveraray Castle, which is situated near Loch Fyne and Loch Awe, and surrounded with woods and moors and brooks, and in sight of rugged mountains. He became famous as a sportsman, and was a good hand at the rifle in target practice. But under the influence of his mother who held the position of Queen Victoria's Mistress of the Robes, and of his grandmother the accomplished and stately lady of Sutherland, he became accustomed to those courtly graces and refinements which are characteristic of Britain's old nobility.

His youthful education was conducted at home, where he frequently mingled with the most celebrated men of the period, who were from time to time the guests of the Argylls. At the age of twelve years he went to Eton where he distinguished himself by successful study as well as in athletic exercises. He won the annual prize given by Prince Albert for proficiency in modern languages, and was an adept at the game of cricket. He had the entree of Windsor Castle, and frequently met the Queen and the royal family. Here he made intimate acquaintance with the Princess Louise, who afterwards became his wife.

The Marquis went from Eton to the University of St. Andrews, Scotland, and finally to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated, and then took the usual tour of the continent, being received at several of the European courts. He subsequently visited the West Indies and the United States, and on his return published an interesting little book entitled "A Trip to the Tropics." He then started in political life, entering Parliament as member for Argyll. On his father's assumption of the office of Secretary for India, in the Gladstone cabinet, he acted as the Duke's secretary, working diligently for two years in the India Office.

On March 21, 1871 the Marquis was married to the Princess Louise, in presence of the Queen and a host of notables, in the Royal Chapel of St. George, the union of a member of the royal family with a subject being a departure from the strict rules of the court and contrary to the "Royal Marriage Act." But the consent of Her Majesty to the union was ratified by Parliament, and the usual dowry was not withheld. But the married Marquis could not rank with his wife on any public occasion. While she moved in front with the Princes and Princesses of the blood, her simple Lord had to take a place in the rear behind the scions of continental royalty, many of whom were far inferior to him in wealth, prospects, illustrious lineage and genuine nobility.

In Canada, however, Lord Lorne takes precedence of his wife, Princess though she be. He stands at the head of colonial affairs, and judging by the ovation he has received he will have little difficulty in winning his way to the hearts of the people. Lord Dufferin departed with the regrets and esteem of nearly all Canada. But the Marquis has been welcomed with enthusiasm, and the tact and far-seeing shrewdness of the Earl of Beaconsfield are as clearly exhibited in the stroke of policy which lifted the Queen's son-in-law from a very embarrassing position in England, and placed him as the representative of the Crown in Canada, as in anything that subtle statesmanship has recently accomplished. The movement has occasioned many jealousies and provoked many sneers from ambitious political aspirants, but the Queen's supremacy will be upheld by the position accorded to the husband of her daughter, and the very source of Lord Lorne's difficulties at home will be one of the principal causes of his colonial prestige and influence.

A writer in the London World recently caricatured the new Governor-General, under the title of "McTapperit." The signification of this is a Scotch variety of the little-coiled Tapperit in Dickens' "Barnaby Rudge." But while this may serve as fun for the ill-natured, sensible people see no lines of semblance between the Scottish noble and the ridiculous aspirant to the hand of Dolly Varden, who is as likely to work out a brilliant career as his predecessor, who at his age had done no more than he to make his name famous in history. Lord Lorne is a man of culture, some political experience and considerable knowledge of the world. He will have the benefit of the advice of wise statesmen in the Dominion, and his wife is a Princess of the royal blood, whose presence will be flattering to the populace. And here will be a rare opportunity for the nobility-and royalty-worshipping republicans of the United States. By simply crossing the border into the Dominion they will have a chance of worshipping at the shrine of a real live Princess, and many of them achieve the distinction of being presented, which they never could have obtained in England even after the trouble of a journey across the great Atlantic.

BY TELEGRAPH.

FOR THE DESERET EVENING TELEGRAPH LINE.

EASTERN.

The Indian Bureau.

NEW YORK, 27.—The Tribune's Washington special says: The commissioner of Indian affairs, in his annual report, states that the efficiency of his office has been greatly improved. The report gives the views of the bureau on the recent outbreak of the Bannock Indians.

Internal Revenue.

Commissioner Raum, of the Internal revenue bureau, urges the passage of a stringent law for the punishment of violators of the revenue laws in the south.

The Indian Teams.

WASHINGTON, 27.—A telegram received to-day, from agent Evans, reports that all the Indian teams, comprising 97 wagons arrived safely from the Missouri River with supplies, for the agency. The Red Cloud Indians thus doing their own transportation, and the result of the experiment is considered very gratifying. The distance traversed is about 400 miles.

Gen. Kaufman's Sword Speech.

The Herald's London special says: The Herald's correspondent a Berlin telegraphs that a British courier passed through that city on Sunday last, enroute to St. Petersburg. It is rumored, in well-informed circles in the Prussian capital, that he is the bearer of instructions to Lord Loftus, the British ambassador to Russia, to demand explanations respecting the speech recently made by General Kaufman, in presenting the sword of honor sent by the Czar to the Ameer of Afghanistan. This speech is looked upon here as a direct promise that the Russians will help the Afghans if they are hard pressed by England, and if General Kaufman's action is not repudiated by the government of St. Petersburg, serious complications are anticipated. Fears are entertained that the difficulty may lead to a general war.

A Challenge.

Napoleon Campana, of Bridgeport, has challenged O'Leary to a six days' walk.

Exports and Imports.

The Times' Washington special says: The exports for November are $65,000,000; the imports, $37,000,000. Compared with October, 1877, was an increase of $6,000,000 in exports, and a decrease of $6,500,000 in imports.

A Naturalized Chinaman.

A Chinaman was naturalized in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday.

No Help Wanted.

Charles B. Wright, president of the Northern Pacific Railroad, disclaims, in a morning paper, the intention of the company to ask Congress for a subsidy loan or any form of assistance. The company considers itself able to build the road with its own resources, and the land grant already made. They seek only a limited guarantee against confiscation.

All Safe.

A dispatch received by a relative of Amstein, states that his wife, family, and nurse landed with him from the Pommerania at Cherbourg.

Consolidation of Indian Tribes Urged.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs' report urges the consolidation of tribes as recommended by his predecessors, reducing the reservations to nine in number, and restoring to the public domain 17,542,455 acres of land. He thinks the most of the Indians in Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona, may be removed to Indian Territory, the Klamath Indians to the Takima Reservation, Washington Territory, whether the Bannock and Malheur Indians will be immediately sent. The Commissioner of Revenue appeals for a permanent title to the Indian lands, recommends the organization of 3,000 Indian cavalry under army officers, for service near the reservations. He publishes a correspondence between the agent of the Bannocks and the military to show that the latter were well informed of the actual state of affairs in time to be prepared for hostilities, also that the Indians received all the subsistence funds appropriated by Congress enabled the Indian office to purchase. He shows that the agent of the Cheyennes was required by the law of Congress to withhold the supplies from the Indians who would not work, which lead to the outbreak of the Cheyennes. He recommends the removal of the Umatillas, in Oregon, to the Takima reservation, and that the lands be sold for their benefit. The Mission and Hooper Valley Agencies, California, are re established. Their discontinuance was caused by the failure of Congress to make an appropriation.

Redemption of Bonds.

The Secretary of the Treasury will, this afternoon, issue a call for the redemption of five millions 5.20 bonds of 1865, consols of 1865, coupons and registered bonds.

The Clymes's.

READING, Pa., 27.—Miss Mary Hiester Clymer, passenger on the steamship Pommerania, was the only sister of Hon. Hiester Clymer, M. C., and widow of W. B. Clymer, who died in Italy three years ago. She was on her way to Europe with her four children, Mary, Rosa, Maria and Richard, where they were to complete their education.

Horrible Double Murder.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., 27.—A horrible murder was perpetrated in North Edgefield, yesterday afternoon, in which Sim Langham was the slayer, and Pat McAndrews, and Julius Heister were the slain. Langham beating out their brains. The jury in the McAndrews case, returned a verdict of justifiable killing, and one in the Heister case, saying that he came to his death, by the hands of Langham, without expression of opinion, as to whether it was justifiable or not.

The Success of the British Troops in the Khyber Pass.

CHICAGO, 27.—The Times' London special says: So far, the Ameer's troops, like a mob, fly or surrender. Already the British flag floats at Dhaka and Gellalabad, famous for Sale's defence 25 years ago. Cabul is only a hundred miles off. The Russian newspapers promise the English generals that the Ameer will make splendid resistance there. This reminds one of the speculation of the European military authorities a week ago, as to the tremendous works at Ali Musjid, and the defenses in the mountain country. At first the English advance looked like being drawn into an ambush, but not so. The chiefs of the hill tribes are making submissions, and the enterprise of the invader strikes panic into the Afghans. With Jellalabad as a base of operations, and the Khyber secure in the rear, the attack on Cabul will be made with prospects of success greater than from Peshawer.

There was a cabinet council yesterday, and there will be another next Thursday. Indian affairs especially reported, the Russian movements towards Herat, are also touching the Chiras desire to reconquer Kashgar, which is against the Russian interests, are under consideration. It seems there are many keys to India. Herat is one. Meru is the key to Herat. Russia's position commands Meru. If Russia held Herat, Candahar and Cabul, she would have a strategical triangle of enormous strength. If she means fighting, she will aim at this. The Times' correspondent is well informed that this was one of the subjects discussed at the cabinet council.

FOREIGN.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Transvaal Rebellion.

LONDON, 27.—Vigorous measures are being taken for the effectual suppression of the Transvaal rebellion. The mail steamers, of the Cape of Good Hope lines, are being fitted as transports. The first reinforcement will sail early in December.

Liberty and Equality.

A Bucharest dispatch says: Prince Charles, of Roumania, has issued a proclamation formally annexing the Dobrudja and proclaiming liberty and equality for the Mohammedans and Christians.

The Ameer Releases His Son.

A Bombay dispatch says: It is reported that the Ameer, upon hearing of the fall of Fort Ali Musjid, released his son Yakoob Khan.

The Khurd Cabul Pass.

A Lahore dispatch says: It is believed that Gen. Browne will profit by the panic of the Afghans to seize Khurd Cabul Pass.

Further Particulars Relating to the Fearful Collision.

Captain Pritchard, of the bark Noel Ellian, is very reticent, and refuses to show his log. He says he was going down the channel at five knots an hour. He was on the deck of the Noel Ellian, had been sounding the fog horn all night, until the steamer's lights were visible. The collision occurred before those on board the Noel Ellian were aware. The blow was a glancing one, the bark bounded off, and he did not again see the steamer. Captain Pritchard thought he was sinking. The Noel Ellian was too much disabled to render assistance. Seven feet of her bow was carried away. Her lights were burning brightly at the time. She was sailing free on the starboard tack. The Pommerania ran across her bows and came on to her port bow, turning her around completely, and then went away at full speed. He was not aware that the Pommerania had sunk until he arrived at Folkstone.

The various accounts of the survivors concur in praising Captain Schwenzen and his officers, but represent that the crew only added to the confusion by a determination to save themselves. Captain Schwenzen, to quell the excitement, told the passengers the vessel was aground.

Roderick Schneider, a passenger, states that the captain, replying to repeated entreaties to get into one of the boats, asked them to stand alongside, when the mate shouted "We have waited long enough." The captain told them to pull away a little and wait. Just then the vessel sank. As she went down, Captain Schwenzen threw up his arms and exclaimed "Oh, God!" While the boat was rowing about we saw many people in the water with life preservers wrongly put on, so that the lower part of the body was floating, while the head was under water.

The conduct of the second boatswain, on board the steamer, in endeavoring to save the ladies, was admirable, the carpenter stood by with a hatchet threatening to kill anybody who attempted to rush into the boats.

Mary Clymer says she was in the same boat with her sister Rose. They were both awakened by a crash and rushed on deck, half dressed, to where the boats were being put off. They were then joined by their brother, who assisted her (Mary) into the boat. A sailor threw Rose in, but she fell into the water, and had to be dragged out. Young Clymer, who remained on the steamer, seeing the boat full, and the sailors trying to get on board, thus endangering the lives of all, cut the ropes and set her adrift, saying "Godbye" to his saved relatives. He thought his mother and other relatives were in the boat, but the sailors had prevented them from getting in. It is a noticeable fact that 108 sailors out of 111 are saved.

Louise Rasemann, of Philadelphia, a steerage passenger, who escaped, says: Captain Schwenzen's last words, when the boat was obliged to row away to avoid being sucked down, were, in German, "Farewell, children." There were a good many passengers around the captain, crying for help and clinging to him and to each other.

Henry Schmidt, a steerage passenger, says the plug was missing from the boat first lowered, which prevented her from being righted when she capsized. Six persons were drowned from that boat. A rowlock was missing from the second boat, which prevented her going to the assistance of the strugglers.

One of the Pommerania's crew says he saw the bark's lights ten minutes before she struck, but the collision did not seem probable until three minutes before it occurred. As Noel Ellian was going free, she might have avoided striking. The Pommerania went to port as far as she could but the collision was then unavoidable.

The first officer Franzen, says it was his watch. He was in charge of the ship. Captain Schwenzen was on deck, but not on the bridge. Franzen declines to say whether the whistle was blowing.

A telegram has been received from Maasline, Holland, announcing that the steamer City of Amsterdam had arrived there with the Captain of the Pommerania on board.

Ann Wessel, New York; Louise Rasemann, Philadelphia, Amalie Newmann, New York, and Sophie Boltzman, remained at the Sailor's Home, in Dover, last night. All the survivors left for London or the continent, this morning, with the exception of three children, who are supposed to have been orphaned by the disaster. One child, Martha Miller, aged four years says she is the daughter of a sea captain, now at Buenos Ayres. The child adds that her mother, sister Dora, and her brother Allie were on board the Pommerania.

Two children, girls, age respectively three years, and nine months, remain in Dover not identified.

A telegram from Maasliens, in reply to an inquiry for information of Captain Schwenzer, says he left immediately for Rotterdam.

General Roberts Pushing on.

A dispatch from Lahore states that General Roberts has reached Fort Mahomed Azim, near Kurrum Fort, without opposition.
