Hot Water In Paris.

The slot-in-the-slot machine has found a very useful adaptation in Paris where a new apparatus has recently been set up at several points in the public streets for the purpose of supplying hot water. A small structure is utilized as a bill board for advertising placards, and at a convenient point a faucet protrudes. Near the faucet is a slot, and beside the slot a button. To use the apparatus a pail is placed beneath the faucet, a few centimes placed upon the button and value in one of our old fashioned copper cents is dropped in the slot, the button is pushed and forthwith a jet of steaming hot water gushes from the faucet into the pail, running until nine cents have been delivered, when the stream stops automatically.

The interior of the apparatus is partly occupied by a coil of pipe, within which is a gas burner, exactly as in contrivances used in this country for heating water quickly. The coil communicates with the city water supply, so that the water drawn is always fresh. The gas is not wasted by being kept burning all the time, but is lighted by the pressing of the button which opens the faucet, and the automatic closing of the faucet and shutting off the gas after the pailful of water has been delivered are easily adapted by devices in common use. One of the chief uses of this new institution is the filling of hot water cans which the cab drivers place in their cabs during cold weather to warm their patrons' feet.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

"Lohengrin" in Paris.

Early the whole of an act of "Lohengrin" has at last been performed at the Grand Opera, but the trick was managed in such a way that no Chauvinistic prejudices could be hurt. It was announced that at the performance given for the benefit of M. Dumaine a duet from Wagner's opera would be sung by Mme. Caron and M. Vergnet. When the audience expected the two singers to come on in ordinary dress the conductor gave the signal for the orchestra to attack the first chord of the prelude to the third act.

The curtain then rose on the bridal chorus, and, this finished, Elsa and Lohengrin were left on the stage to sing the most interesting and the most impassioned love duet that has ever been written. Now that an attempt has been made to reverse the sentence passed upon Tannhauser five and twenty years ago at the Opera, and to make amends for the brutal treatment of "Lohengrin" at the Lyric theatre, it is to be hoped that the hundreds who applaud Wagner at the Sunday concerts week after week and year after year may at length have a chance of hearing his masterpiece at the French Academy of Music.—Paris Co. London Telegraph.

Co-operative Housekeeping.

The experiment of the co-operative housekeeping organization which has been in operation in Kansas City has been watched with much interest, as the organization of such a club has been too taken mainly in final stories and Bellamy like books. The club is limited to fifty members, who elected their officers and a board of directors, with terms expiring in three, six and nine months. Mrs. W. J. Kupper was placed in charge of the house, and to her was given the arranging of the bill of fare. An assessment of $5.50 a week is levied upon each boarder, and is payable every Monday morning.

Mrs. Kupper uses all the money collected to supply the table, and the co-operative method enables her to supply delicacies and a service equal to that of the best hotels for the sum of twelve cents a meal. There are thirty rooms and suites in the house, and those Mrs. Kupper wants to each of the members of the club as desire to live under the same roof, and a majority of them are lodged thus.

As soon as a vacancy occurs a new name is voted upon. During the few months that the club has been in existence not a day has passed that some applications have not been received. A committee investigates each applicant, and only the names of the best people are considered. There are in the club six married couples, and the rest are mostly merchants and business men. No wives are admitted unless as members of families, and no extra meals are served.

The club was organized from ideas suggested by Bellamy and some other writers on social questions, and is in very way a big success. It is probable that other clubs will be organized here during the winter.—Kansas City Star.

Cushion Canes.

Cushions seem to be the perennial delight of the average woman. This is an age of cushions, and her soul rejoices in them. The saddle bag cushions still exist and are hardly so, as they have happily solved the "lilly" problem. These wretched things, abhorred by mankind, are gone, it is hoped, never to return. Not having long the saddle bags over the backs of our chairs, some maid still is cushions galore for window seats, benches, corners, to fit in uncomfortable angles—cushions unlimited and of every variety. The molon cushion looks rather pretty if it is well made, but the worm cushion is worse and is being shown at fancy shops. This, which is of course many times the size of its forest prototype, has the worm of pale green silk and the cap of darker green, which is put on rather full and sewed down in spots to give the raised, uneven look of nature.

Another pretty combination of the worm is reddish brown plush and yellow silk. A loop is sewed for the worm to take hold by. These well defined shapes, however, cannot be recommended as satisfactory for general wear. Plain squares, oblongs, oval or round cushions last longer in every way, and can be so different in material and decoration as to supply the needed variety. Write silk cushions wrought in gold embroidery are used in very elegant apartments, but their delicacy hardly fits them for cushion service.—Exchange.

Miss Louise Lawson, of Albany, is a sculptor whose work attests her talent. She has some orders on hand that she can execute in five years, the most important being a commission from the Albany board of public works for a stone fountain.

Opera glass holders which can be affixed to any frames are among the novelties of the season. They are made in silver, plated ware, mother of pearl, mottled aluminum, jet and stained ivory, and sell at $7 and $10 each.

Men Like Aprons.

It is a funny thing, but all men like aprons. There is a something boneishly absurd about that suggests good dinners and sweet, considerate cats. The coquette thoroughly understands this, and every season finds her armed with an apron or two with which she intends to quell mankind. The latest one is made of mummy cloth, quite plain, and gathered in at the waist to a broad sash that is tied at the back. At the bottom are bands of scarlet, blue and green ribbon, arranged just as are the bands of color on the apron of a Roman contadina. No faint colors must be chosen, but just such healthy tones as the dark brunette, dark eyed Italian peasant would select as becoming to her.—New York Sun.

Plucking Turkeys.

To present a good appearance and command a good price as dressed poultry, turkeys must be carefully handled, both before slaughtering and while the feathers are being plucked. Much otherwise good poultry is badly injured and made almost unsalable by reckless handling. Do not let boys who take care of the birds drive them about with a stick or by dirting stones at them. After the turkeys are killed hold them very carefully, not by squeezing the carcass between the knees, while you pluck them.

A turkey which has been carelessly injured, either before or after killing, will not prove profitable when it is marketed, and the sign of ill treatment shown by dents and discolored spots in the naturally fat body will depreciate its value two or three cents per pound—enough to take away a considerable portion of the profit.—Poultry World.

Daughters of the Revolution.

Mrs. Harrison is president of the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution, whose object is to secure and preserve historical localities and to erect thereon suitable monuments to the memory of the men and women who helped to make the Revolution and the constitution possible. The Daughters propose to hold an annual gathering in honor of the discovery of America by Columbus, but their immediate occupation is to secure a worthy collection of Revolutionary and pre-Revolutionary relics, to be first shown at the Chicago fair and then made a permanent exhibition in Washington.—Harper's Bazar.

Women in Wall Street.

The widow of E. A. Pollard, the historian of the Southern Confederacy, has opened in Wall street a broker's office for the accommodation of women who deal in stocks. It is a curious fact that no woman who has opened a stock speculator's office has, as yet, been permanently successful. Some, like Hetty Green, have been showed outside brokers and made money, but so far as I know, those who have opened regular offices for stock transactions have one and all lost money and quit the business. Perhaps this is, after all, a compliment to women in one way.—New York Cor. Indianapolis News.

Royalty Incog.

A very simply dressed and quiet young lady, who had been visiting Wiesbaden, Homburg, Wildbad and Ems, and who was known at Miss Wolf or Miss Wolsh to the few people who took the trouble to inquire about so unimportant a person, has just been found out to be the Princess Maud of Wales, and the Mrs. Lee Hunters are chagrined that they did not attempt to capture her retiring disposition as Princess. Connected at the aristocratic one, but who was really an important lady of the court sent to attend the princess.—Berlin Letter.

Wear No Jewels Around the Neck.

It is considered very bad form to wear jewels around the neck. Diamond rivieres, rows of pearls or strings of sapphires, rubies and emeralds are placed "magnificent fashion" on the corsage, depending from the left shoulder. A charming parure, put into fashion by Archduchess Valerie of Austria, is a set of diamond butterflies scattered all over the bodice, with a great, dazzling mass hovering over the soft curls on the forehead and two huge jeweled dragonflies on the shoulders.—New York Tribune.

Miss Windsor, an English lady and gifted musician who died recently in Bath, bequeathed the family library to the Royal College of Music in London. The collection contains a number of valuable operas, oratorios, cathedral and chinese music, original scores and many works on the theory and history of music and musicians, together with autograph letters, honors and decorations of famous composers.

The school board at Cherokee, according to a dispatch from Fort Dodge, Ia., announces that hereafter every teacher will be required to sign a contract not to get married during the school year. They have had much trouble over the resignation of teachers for matrimonial purposes during the past year, and propose to obviate the difficulty in this way.

Miss Frances Power Cobbe, author of many books, and one of the oldest of literary women, is at the age of 70 hard at work both as a writer and a reformer. She is full of health and vigor, which she attributes to her simple diet and regular habits, and gives much time to the Antivivisection society in London, of which she is president.

Origin of a Common Expression.

"Barking up the wrong tree" is a very common expression in the west. It originated from the fact that a dog will bark at the foot of a particular tree to indicate to his master where the game is. While endeavoring to see the animal he discovers it on another tree, and it finally escapes him altogether. In its application it denotes that a person has mistaken his object or is looking for it in the wrong place.—Detroit Free Press.

Lots of Old Folks at Home.

There are now living in one house just outside the village of St. George a family of four persons whose combined ages foot up 374 years, as follows: Miss Louise Mann, 106; Robert Mann, 98; Duncan John Mann, 96; Miss Catherine Mann, 92. These four people are in excellent health.—Kansas Journal.

Mr. Hammond, of Bangor, Mich., threw a knife at a mouse. The blade struck the floor, broke in two and splices of the steel cut off his baby's ear and inflicted injuries probably fatal.
