HE WENT TO A BALL.

OVERCOME BY THE HOSPITALITY OF YOUNG LOUISVILLE MEN.

The Dance Was at a Female Seminary, and It Was Full of Surprises—The Stranger Declared He Would Never Attend Another "Shell" Dance In Kentucky.

"Speaking of practical jokes," said a drummer at one of the hotels the other night, "I was the victim of one of the most embarrassing I have heard of for a long time. It was during my first trip south, and not being familiar with the people in this part of the country I thought I had found a really suitable place upon these young 'swells' of the town with whom I had been talking the evening before asked me to go with them to a dance that was to be given at a female seminary a few miles from the city. I had been away from home for some time, and not having had the pleasure of being in the company of young ladies I was fairly delighted at the idea of spending a pleasant evening.

"I told them I would be pleased to go, and after hurried preparation we started. The young men laughed at the idea of my paying anything toward the carriage hire, and I felt that I had never been in the company of a more hospitable set of men.

"When we arrived at the place, the dance had already begun. We left the carriage in one of a negro man and entered the hallways. Of course I felt very strange at first among so many strangers, but my companions seemed to feel quite at home and insisted that I should meet some of the young women at once. One of the young men took me by the arm and led me across the room to where there sat a young woman who was rather pretty and had an extremely neat appearance.

"After receiving an introduction to her I sat down and started a conversation. Soon she was talking at an astonishingly rapid rate. I became rather interested in the girl, but was very much surprised to learn that she was the twentieth daughter of a wealthy farmer. At last she began to talk and laugh so loudly that I began to feel a little embarrassed and asked her if she did not want to dance. She was on her feet in an instant, and we had danced a few steps when she suddenly yelled out at the top of her voice: 'Don't! Don't! Oh, don't hold me so tight! I am full of dress suits.' And she uttered a yell that made the cold chills run up and down my back.

"I turned her loose in an instant and stood simply horrified. I felt like swearing when the other people in the room only laughed and went on dancing. I did not know what to do. I knew I had done nothing I should not have done, intentionally at least, but I started up to her with an apology, when one of my companions came up with a young woman on each arm. He gave some introduction to her and asked me if I would not dance the next set with her. I did not feel like dancing a bit, but there was no way of getting out of it, so I told him I would. While we were sitting down waiting for the next dance she told me she had been married 14 times and had 1,000 children at home. I thought she was just trying to joke me and asked her where she lived. She said she lived in heaven. I knew something was wrong with her, and I made up my mind right there that I would not dance with her. I asked her to excuse me a moment, and without waiting for a reply rushed across the room toward the door. I thought to myself that if I once got on the outside I would never attend another 'swell dance' in Kentucky.

"I had got within a few feet of the door when an old woman ran up and threw her arms around my neck. She yelled out that I was her lost son, who ran away from home six years ago, when I was a mere child. I tried to tear myself away from the woman, and she fainted at my feet. I made a dart for the door, and when I reached the threshold I looked back and saw several persons carrying her off the floor. I was dazed. I expected to be arrested every moment. I was a mile outside and asked him if there was not a train leaving that place soon. He said there would be one going to Louisville in about an hour, and I scrambled to wait around the little station until it was ready to leave. I do not remember to have ever heard a more welcome sound than the wheels of that train, after spending an hour in adversity. I reached my hotel in this city shortly after midnight, but could not sleep. I had formed on the train that I had been in an insane asylum half, and I was as mad as a hornet.

"The next morning the young men came around to the hotel and apologized, and now they are the best friends I have in this city."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Truth of the Matter.

The Bushman tells a story of Mr. F. Cope Whitehouse, who recently spent five years in Europe. He had been long an absentee and had become quite out of touch with the affairs of his native town, and having occasion to call upon the mayor on the question of organizing a certain district and found there almost equally uninformative. After a time he met Lord Cowper, just arrived in the country, and was received with a rolling welcome.

"I really cannot go into these matters with you," said Lord Cowper, "because I hear that you treated my predecessor with great severity."

"Decimating! Decimating of what, sir?"

"Why, I am informed that you actually did so—so—in fact, that you maintained his vote unscathed."

"O! Oh, that has not. Not at all. The truth of the matter was just this: I had a conversation on his attitude in some way that, you see, I couldn't speak of his rectitude, because it would not be strictly complimentary. Of course I couldn't speak of his multiplicity, because that wouldn't be true, you know, so naturally I had to call it rugidity. Don't you see? It really was forced upon me, you understand."

Noise of Toys.

An extremely fine book is the first prize Barred Plymouth Rock hen owned and bred by Mr. E. H. Thompson. She won the first prize of the New York Poultry Show, Madison Square Garden, and also the first prize at the Philadelphia show of 1893. She is a marvelous bird in color, and during the last year has been exhibited in many prominent Plymouth Rock judges that the equal of the hen does not exist. Mr. Thompson is breeding from her this spring, and from her sisters and daughters, and three of his breeding pens are headed by sons of this famous hen. The results from such matings must prove most pleasing.

HEN OF THOMPSON'S.

One Way to Shear a Sheep.

In shearing a sheep the easiest way is to take off the fleece from the belly toward the backbone. A fence shearer in the old country says he was taught to make a continuous line toward the backbone by successive strips of the sheep. These lines met at the backbone on each side. The slight ridge left by the strokes of the shears went down in a straight line toward the underside of the body, owing to appearance of this. This operation is, in fact, called ridging. The sheep were usually sold for after shearing, and this ridging gave them an advantage over those which had been shorn and had not been ridged.
