City Council.

At a meeting of the city council held Monday evening, Mayor Holbrook recommended the closing of $4,000 in the credit of the sinking fund for the exception of waterworks bonds.

Wm. J. Taylor was confirmed as watermaster, James Harry as previous inspector, Hyrum Harris as dog tax collector and Harry Richard as scavenger. The appointees of the mayor for street supervisor, city attorney and city engineer, the council refused to confirm. The Democratic members of the council claim that the mayor should appoint Democrats, and this he has failed to do. In the meantime the old officers hold over.

OBITUARY.

BABE BENNY GREEN.

There died in Draper, Salt Lake county, on Saturday, the 1st inst., aged 32, one of the earliest residents of that thrifty hamlet, Brother Benjamin Green, a rare specimen of rugged honesty and unflinching zeal, as a believer and teller in connection with the great latter-day work.

Deceased was born in 1811 and baptized in Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts, England, in the year 1852, in the spring of 1856 he left his native land, and on arriving in Utah he made for himself a home in Draper, with his wife and little family the experiences incident to those times fell to their lot as to many others; two grasshopper wars and the Bonneville war which followed, taught sacrifice and patriotism, but the Greens were workers and had no time for frivolity or murmuring; earnestness of purpose was a radical feature of character in sire and sons, in mother and daughters, until four generations composed the family circle as the years flew by. The example of fidelity in the parents was transmitted to the family, and two sons make a couple of trips each to the Missouri river for Israel's poor, and they rather exhibit that heroicity in the home missionaries, which was originally so conspicuous in the servants of God in the British Isles.

Brother Green was a useful man in the community of his choice, esteemed in public places, his services were always in demand in cases of sickness and sorrow, the gift of healing rested upon him largely, while his simplicity and humility with strangely abstract and effective balance. As a member of the church he sang "with the spirit and with the understanding" as teacher and exemplar, tendered to draw out the warmest feelings of his singing. With increasing years they strongly entwined "Come, Come, Ye Saints" and "Home, Home." Pleasant cheery words were his, and candy from his capacious pockets was abundant as the snowflakes on Sunday he dwelt.

Sister Green rowed from her trying labors a seven years before her faithful husband, but time for her solved a week in his heart that generous sympathy which was of value to him and to the world, as he filled the role of husband, brother, friend, and to say that while sincerely we who are always on hand, ready to do a kind part a true word know no limit and never mourn in reputation.

Some years ago Brother Green experimented on the form of operative ministry, later went into the mercantile business on his own account. He earned for himself in the great institution of life the reputation for selling honesty and integrity, and when in a small community trading things not really the smallest trade of consequence, he made enemies by friends, the usual pettiness of deal was subservient to zeal and greed never marred the place of honor or of right. The funeral services drew an immense audience together where under the direction of Bishop Allen everything was conducted, an already sympathetic audience was comforted and instructed by speeches Brothers Smith, Nesbitt, Livingstone, Williams, Absmeier, Smith and the Bishop; the singing was excellent, the spirit good, and after the old people had taken their last look at the patriarchal veteran and High Priest, some 100 Sabbath school children, two by two, silently passed into the casket, upon their true and tutored friend, then the long procession wended its way to the city of the dead where the mortal remains of "Dear Uncle Benny" will rest until the morning when "the dead in Christ" shall rise, and he that was "faithful in a few things shall be made ruler over many."

Among the many "Old Folks" who of late have gone to their reward, but few have left a brighter record than Brother Green, and few of family or kindred leave a more supreme satisfaction than his posterity, in contemplating the well spent life of their aged and venerated progenitor.—[Com.
