PAN-AMERICAN CONGRESS.

At a time when the interest of mankind apparently center around questions of a secular nature and nearly everybody is drawn with irresistible force towards the rings of the seething, boiling, roaring, all-engulfing maelstrom of political or economic controversies, it is refreshing to notice that some still find time for a calm discussion of topics bearing on the moral and eternal well-being of the human race. The great congress of religion and education, convened at Toronto July 16, is an expression of the deeply felt need of the age for some safe harbor against the dangers with which it is confronted.

This congress is a natural outgrowth of the parliament of religions held in Chicago in 1893. Its object is to bring all who are interested in the spread of religion into a closer association, one with another, and into sympathetic relationship to all the great educational, philanthropic and reform movements of modern Christianity. It is in harmony with the spirit of fraternal good-fellowship now manifested in most religious denominations in the world, and recognizes the necessity of a union between the world's spiritual and intellectual forces. It is a recognition of principles prominently set forth in the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that unity is the law of creation and growth; that faith is proven by works; that true religion is to be and to do—in a word it would make religion the most practical and most comprehensive factor in human life and the world's progress.

Secretary Sherin, of the congress, says:

> If we fail to get all people to agree as to what Jesus Christ taught and said, we hope to get them to join in doing things He did. Our purpose is to bring together prominent learned people from among clergymen, philanthropists, educators and statesmen, of all countries in the two Americas, to consider the great social, economic and moral problems pertaining to human society, to develop fraternal feelings, eliminate prejudice and hate from people having different creeds, but the same humanity, and if we fail to bring them into one church and under one creed, we aim to bring them into one state of fraternal feeling toward each other. The great question how to repress evil, eliminate want and distress from humanity, care for the dependents and deficients in mind and body and develop the good, are among the questions to be considered. The best methods of conducting public charities, hospitals, asylums and orphanages and needed improvements in the welfare of such will be discussed, and practical Christianity in all its phases.

In accordance with this program the congress will be divided in sections for the discussion of education, philanthropy, temperance, woman's work, editors and authors, Sunday schools, missions, etc. Prominent men and women of different denominations have agreed to deliver lectures and read papers on these subjects.

The movement in the Christian world for union is one of the great signs of the times. It is extending with rapidity throughout the earth. The Protestant churches in this country as well as in Europe are planning for co-operation, for the evident reason that the impossibility of their present attitude has begun to dawn upon the enlightened minds of all classes of people. The leadership will come both from behind the old creeds and dogmas, to rescue religion from its long tyranny, for the purpose of rendering it an active factor in the world. It is an attempt at resurrection to new life and activity.

Undoubtedly, after a little while similar congresses will be held in different quarters of the globe, and when the work of revival has taken a definite shape, one great lesson will be manifested to the world—the impossibility of succeeding without direct divine aid, and the result will be, let us hope, a petition of God's children to Heaven for the light of revelation and power from above. Those healed both in the scientific sense of the highest physiology, have without doubt made not have contemplated that dispensation after the manner of the new dispensation was not ordained in unity and communication with Heaven was indirect, for our Christians of today believe religion without authority and revelation. It may be in full accord with the divine plan to send to the troubling zones in the valley, but as Ezekiel is serious in prophecy to them and call upon them to hear the word of the Lord. By so other means can the scattered forces of earth and churches be saved from their present condition to one of vitality and usefulness in the service of the Master for the good of their fellow men.

LIBRARIAN SPOFFORD'S NEMESIS.

Every intelligent visitor to the Capitol at Washington whose counts of that glorious building included the congressional library (either in its present or past quarters) must have been struck with the admirable fitness and the splendid capacity of its chief, Librarian A. R. Spofford. For a great many years he has held the position, and he is far better known today than the great majority of congressmen whose term of office has been co-incident with his. A thorough bookworm, and apparently having at his finger tips the contents of the vast store of volumes under his direction, he is nevertheless a most affable and approachable man, good-natured and accommodating in the highest degree.

These graces and qualifications, however, may not blind the observer to the fact, but rather serve to emphasize it, that according to recent dispatches Mr. Spofford's own goodness of heart may have led to his undoing. Bookworms are not usually keen business men; and when they are particularly easy-tempered, they are peculiarly the victims of unscrupulous and tricky associates. The copyright department of the library is of itself a mammoth institution and its fees must aggregate a very large sum. In the detailed labor of keeping all these things straight, any chief must of necessity depend largely upon subordinates. In the present instance it is necessary to state that in addition to his own presumed inability to grapple with accounts, Mr. Spofford has been the unsuspecting victim of the spoils system in its worst form. The library has been deemed a suitable place for congressional favorites, who have been dumped in upon the aged chief, no doubt in many instances quite regardless of their fitness, in a way calculated to upset the best intentions of a far more aggressive and vigorous official. It is another glaring instance of the havoc wrought by that pernicious evil in our public departments. At any time an outrage and a crime, the spoils system is especially atrocious when it drags octogenarians and bears raise the character of an honorable, loyable, able but gentle old man.

IMPORTANT TO MEXICAN COLONISTS.

For the benefit of those who either for business or pleasure contemplate a prolonged journey or permanent settlement in Old Mexico, the News gives information that the custom house at Las Palomas has been reopened. The point lies immediately south of Deming, New Mexico, where the railroad would be left by those proceeding into the neighboring republic in that vicinity. It was closed some time ago owing to various unpleasantnesses, and since then settlers desiring to cross the border have had to make a considerable detour in order to reach another office where their effects could be properly inspected and passed. Its reopening will be a great convenience to all such as may wish to identify themselves with our settlements in Chihuahua, and the fact should be generally made known.

PROTECT THE STAGE.

In the interest of the stage as well as morality in general, the scheme to present in dramatic form the horrible tragedy enacted in the Emmanuel Baptist church, San Francisco, should be protested against and frowned down. It is not impossible that such blood-curdling scenes would draw large audiences and consequently prove successful from a mere mercenary point of view. Many people are instinctively drawn towards the horrible as the bird towards the venomous fangs of the snake. People used to flock around the stakes where human beings were expiring in untold agonies; around the gallows and executioner's ax, no matter if they knew beforehand that they would soon be before all was over. That spirit still lingers among people and they go, they know not why, to places where horrors are exhibited. But the moral effect of it is disastrous, and public enlightened opinion should be depended upon to forward any attempt to degrade the stage by making it the mouthpiece of the most vulgar and reprehensible.

No parents would consent to give their children, whose minds are so open to impression, good or bad, an opportunity to associate with thieves, murderers and other criminals or to immolate themselves with the scenes of their crimes. They would shield them even from the contact with such characters offered by the low-class dime literature of the day. But the stage is a much more potent factor than the average novel, and its influence should be guarded with jealous care, lest it should become a school of crime, a menace to public safety. Today, no girl could go to the theater to see the supposed crime of Dorothea (now deceased) without sustaining some moral injury, perhaps irreparable.

THE CHICAGO MORNING MYSTERY in one fact is strange equalled in novels even in detective stories drawn solely from imagination. It was claimed that Pietzel related into a conspiracy with Holmes to defraud an insurance company of $10,000. Then a dead body was found identified as that of Pietzel, but the company refused to pay the money to the holder of the policy. Then came the discovery of the two dead bodies at the Pietzel children and the allegation that the widow of the missing man by means of hypnotism was held under the influence of Holmes. At present all the indications are that the latter is a veritable demon, who sacrificed six lives and his own soul for $10,000. But the question whether Pietzel is dead or alive does not seem to be settled satisfactorily yet. Nothing is wanting for the ideal of a blood curdling novel, truth again being stranger than fiction.

THE REASON WHY ex-President Harrison at the close of the Morrison trial announced that he would not again accept employment in a jury case is now said to be that he was mortified at a remark made by Congressman Henry W. Johnson during the trial. The court ruled against Johnson in favor of Harrison, and the former of last explained: "If the presence of an ex-President in this case has anything to do with the rulings of the court, it is time that we knew it." The judge counsel said Harrison blushed as he replied: "There is no ex-President in this case. I am here as a citizen of this state and in the discharge of my duty, as I see it, to my client, and the fact that the people of my country have seen fit to honor me should not be brought to the case." The ex-President was deeply mortified over the incident, and made up his mind not to appear in a jury trial again.

A FASHIONABLE shoemaker in Paris, according to an exchange, authority for the statement that the aristocratic Tribyn of the city spend enormous sums on their footwear. The following instances are given: Not long ago, a countess, whose name is on everybody's lips, had a pair of ball slippers made, which were covered with embroidery in gold and set with rubies, emeralds and diamonds. The slippers were charming, but they cost $25,000. Another lady, a widowed countess who lives in London and was invited to a ball masque at the duke of Manchester's, appeared there as Cinderella in a comfort and unassuming garb, but her slippers were covered entirely with diamonds, worth about $50,000. The bill for the selling and the making of the slippers amounted alone to $750. The shoemaker does not add: "Wont fools these mortals be?"

THE PLAN FOUND by a wealthy New York syndicate, backed presumably by the Rothschilds, to buy Cuba for $100,000,000, is one which the Spanish government ought to support. It would relieve it of a burden under which it has been groaning for years. Cuba may be a gem, but it has proven too expensive for a country not wealthier than Spain is. The question is, however, whether the patriotic Cubans who now are exerting themselves to the utmost in order to cast off an oppressive yoke would benefit by a transfer of their country from the Spanish government to the scepter of the money Czars. As far as the common people are concerned the change might possibly be one from the frying pan into the fire—from the smarting whips of Salmon to the stinging scorpions of Rockefeller.

A STRANGE experience is that of the girl whose history is outlined in a dispatch from Delaware, Ohio. She was stolen by Indians in her infancy, heard of the existence of a gold mine, and while searching for the treasure met the man to whom she subsequently was married. Some day perhaps she will compare the adventure of King Saul to hers. He went out to look for a donkey and found a royal diadem; she sought a golden crown but found a—husband.

AN OPINION GIVEN.

Recently Mr. J. D. Thomas, of North Dakota, visited the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, and after carefully examining the country located in Winchester, he writes to Mr. V. Hugo Friedrichs, Land and Immigration Agent, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Baltimore, Maryland, as follows: "I have been in nearly every state and territory of the United States, and am back in my opinion that the valley surpasses all other sections in the Union. The lands are low in price, and produce profitable crops. I thank you for directing me here, and which those seeking pleasant and profitable homes to locate in this country."
