THE OLD PRINTER.

He Was Short of Type and When "Thirty" Came, He Quit Half Done.

And so your editor joins the throng among the here on a morning paper. He went to bed about the time the rest of the world got up, and he wrote about the time the rest of the world sat down to dinner. He worked by every kind of light, except sunlight. There were candles in the office when he came in, but they had laid on kerosene that smoked and sputtered and smelled; there were two or three printers hitched in expressions of complaint and spent gas; then kerosene came in and heated up the newsroom on summer nights like a furnace; then the office got in gas, and now the electric light swung from the ceiling and dazzled all our eyes and glared into them from his copy.

It is long on his way home a policeman hailed him "chum that," and reminded him that he was disturbing the peace, and people wanted to sleep. But when he wanted to sleep, the rest of the world, for whom he had sat up all night to make a morning paper, roared and roared by down the noisy streets under his window, with carts and trucks and omnibuses; thared out with brass bands, howled with hand organs, talked and shouted, and even the shrieking newsboys, with a ghastly sarcasm, murdered the sleep of the 1 of all people by yelling the time of his own paper.

Year after year the foreman roared at him to remember that this was not an afternoon paper, editors shrieked down the tube to give a blind man pots that dull mind case, smart young proofreaders scribbled scornful solecisms on his work on the margin of his proof slips that they didn't know how to read, long winded correspondents hurried to write and long haired poets who could never learn to spell wrathfully cast all their imperfections upon his head. But through it all he wrought patiently and found more sunshine than shadow in the world; he had more friends than enemies.

Printers and foremen and pressmen and reporters and editors came and went, but he stood, and he saw newspapers and successes, filled and emptied and filled and emptied again, and filled with new strange faces. He believed in his craft, and so the sad he had a silent pity, that came as true being customarily as his grief, forgiving all heart could feel, for an editor who had not worked his way from a regular devil up to put the cases and the imposing stone.

He worked all that night, and when the hands that are so sweet in the bathroom and so long in the emptying room drew wearily on, he was tired. He hadn't Dickens in a very bad case, he said, and he had to climb clear into the tops and chase a type up into a corner before he could get hold of it. One of the boys, tired as himself—not a printer is never too tired to be good natured—offered to change places with him, but the old man said there was enough in the case to last him through this time, and he wouldn't work any more tonight. The type clinked in the rival room, and by and by the old man said:

"I'm out of sorts."

And sat down on the low window sill by his case, with his stick in his hand, his hands folded wearily in his lap. The types clinked on. A gallery of telegraph waited.

"What sentiment is lingering with Dr. D?" called the foreman, who was dungerously polished and polite when he was on the point of exploding with wrath and impatience.

Sing aloud, passing by the alley, stopped to speak to the old man sitting there so quietly.

The telegraph boy came running in with the last scant inch sheet, shouting:

"Thirty!"

They carried the old man to the foreman's long table and laid him down reverently and covered his face. They took the shoes out of his nerveless hand and read his last take:

"Boston, Nov. 25.—The American bark Pilgrim went to pieces off Marblehead in a light gale about midnight. She was old and unseaworthy, and this was to have been her last trip."—Rob Burdette.

Various Uses of One Tree.

One of the strangest of trees is the Ita palm, found abundantly on the banks of the Amazon and other South American rivers. In the swampy regions, which are innumerable areas, the Ita palm furnishes food, drink, clothing and comfortable homes for the natives.

The Indians that inhabit these swampy districts make a tolerable wine from the sap of the palm, and they distill a stronger stimulant by crushing and fermenting the young fruits. The food is derived from the soft inner bark of the stems, and is a substance that in taste and appearance closely resembles sago. The soft fibrous bark is used for garments and for making strings, ropes, hammocks and the like.

In times of high water, often lasting two or three months, the natives make footrafts in the trees with the bark ropes and live there in comfort and contentment.—Philadelphia Times.

Hard Work Made Mackay Rich.

John W. Mackay was born in the humblest circumstances in Dublin, Ireland, some fifty-five years ago. Coming to this country very early in life, he worked for a time on board ship. During the years that followed in whatever occupation he engaged he labored industriously and faithfully. He saved his money and watched his opportunity, which to very few people do. He is now twenty times a millionaire.—Henry Clews in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Devil's Knob.

Among the famous bells of Doncaster, Yorkshire, England, is one known as "Black Tom of Scothill," which was presented to the church in expiation of a murder. "Black Tom" is always rung on Christmas eve. Its sonorous tolling at it strikes the first tap at exactly midnight is known all over Yorkshire as the "devil's knell," it being the notion that when Christ was born the devil died.—St. Louis Republic.

Regret to Resume Past Life.

In London a negro can go into the finest restaurants and be served just as a white man. He can sit at any public table if he is quiet and can pay the bill. White waiters serve him without a murmur, and the American dandy swagger as it sliding sideways on a cloud, picking a tooth with one hand and eating heavy with the other, when he is turned loose in the English metropolis with fifty dollars in his pockets.—Richmond Dispatch.

Pleasant for the Children.

I heard yesterday of a position of a nine of the town who has a large family of children, boys and girls. The office is about eighteen. Whenever a child has been good one hour he has bought a black ball. He has written the children never upon the street and he has carried upon the place his form, pacific backsliding, all sums of money spent from the child from the day of its birth. He has set at a glance the cost of its food, its dress, what he paid for its medical care and doctor, the price of its schooling, and every dollar of its income. And he proposes when each child is twenty one to give it a birthday book, and after the date is out he will present the book to its offspring saying, "Here you can see what you have cost me."

The expense of the feast will be included in the sum total. His theory is that the child will thus learn the value of money, and that he will be more prudent and grateful in after years. I do not as yet know whether he expects these sums to be repaid to him in installments or whether they will be considered as an advance and to be deducted from the legacy. But I wonder such a system of Bonanzing shocks me, and I shudder when I think of the fate of these little ones.—Boston Post.

A Singular House.

A funny story is told of Dean Swift, who was a witty man and fond of a joke at the expense of other people as much witty people are. One very wet night when he was traveling he stopped at a little inn. There was only one fire in the house, and the guests of the inn crowding about it left no place for the newcomer.

With a salaam Dean Swift called to the hostler and told him he got a lot of oysters immediately and take them out to his horse.

"Will your horse eat oysters, sir?" asked the astonished man.

"Just take them out and see," said the horse's master.

The people around the fire stared at the man who offered him oysters and nearly every one of them left the fire and went out to see the remarkable horse eating oysters.

Then the cunning dean made himself comfortable in the warmest corner, and ordered his supper.

Presently Swift came the hostler with the disappointed crowd after him.

"He won't touch them, sir," cried the hostler.

"Then take the foolish animal off the table he can eat," replied Dean Swift. "I can bring the oysters here I'll eat them for supper myself."—Harper's Young People.

Silver Bargains.

Silk faced purchases and others called Dutch are very fashionable and some of them are remarkable, running as long. All silk patterns are made invariable size, with exquisite bordering in Chinese designs. Some of the patterns are so fine that and that the name of silk satin damasks, in two and three colors, in the most delicate and pleasing tints, in Lords XV, XVI and Colonial patterns, the broadcloth elegant enough for a queen's gown.

These, when used for curtains and portieres, are lined with silk made in the same width, called matelassing drapery. It is impossible to tell two sides, one following the pattern and one in the damask and the other matelassing, and throws over the surface a trailing footmark in white, which makes it an exquisite material, which is also used separate from the damask in many instances, as it is reversible.

Table covers are made to match the portieres and hangings, and come in several sizes, so that a room can be completely furnished, so to speak, from one piece of goods. A few years ago this all would have been beyond the reach of any but the very wealthy, but these silks and tapestries are now in the trade in America, and while they are costly still as good and handsome as and as durable as the imported and more fashionable.—Decorator and Furnisher.

Cotton Tail Rabbits.

Cotton Tail rabbits have been plentiful in the early part of the present season. But with the year of great crops in the west they will now be more plentiful on the market.

Cupidon, by name is ten, according to a newspaper correspondent. This venerable authority asserts that a hen in Walla Walla changes the size of her eggs every day.

There will be a great market this Thanksgiving and Christmas for turkeys and fine poultry. Last Christmas in New York the supply of turkeys gave out entirely and someone prices were offered. Making your dressed poultry look attractive when brought to market is half the battle.

Contented Friends.

There are tens of thousands of dollars lying in the vaults of the subtreasury in New York which belong to pensioners. Checks have been issued periodically covering the whole amount, but from one cause or another the money has never been claimed. The checks have never been presented. The money stands to the credit of the various pension agents acting as disbursing officers of the government. An account with one of these officials is never closed until all the checks issued to and no more are to come. He may have overdrawn. There is no way to determine this until everything is squared up.—New York Herald.

George D. Burton, an iron manufacturer of Cincinnati, has made gratifying progress in electrical forging. By a process patented in his own establishment he is able to turn out an axel rail-road spike per minute. Mr. Burton also makes auger cones, with an absolutely true spiral, by his electrical process, and he can mill and wind any metal cones at a fine. Bad Blood. The thought is terrible; the trouble is serious. No ordinary help can remove it. It requires something musical. Do not take cheap sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. You must have something that has proven its power in both Europe and America. Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters, of London, says: "My experience in the English army, as well as in America, convinces me that nothing so thoroughly purifies the blood, quickens the health, vigorous life, as Dr. Jacob's English Blood Bitters."

This grand Elixir is sold by druggists in all parts of America. It is a cordial, pure, tonic medicine. Try it to-day.

BROKEN OUT!

How often do we see this on the faces of children and also of people who otherwise are healthy? What causes it? Bad Blood. The thought is terrible; the trouble is serious. WHAT IS A GUARANTEE?

Many merchants and salesmen are in the habit of indiscriminately "guaranteeing" their wares with no thought of being called upon to make the "guarantee" good. It is a parsimonious and foolish custom more respected in the breach than in the observance.

A guarantee, to have any value, should be made with knowledge of the meaning of the word and a set purpose to carry out the terms of the guarantee. On this basis the makers instruct us to warrant, and we replace any tool found imperfect in use.

We have used our best judgment, aspired by a considerable experience, in selecting the following items for our stock and sell them to our customers with an absolute guarantee that if they do not prove to be all that we represent them, we will refund the purchase money in full.

"Jewel" Steel Ranges. A finished article, perfectly proportioned, made of the best material. Don't fail to see it. It will pay you.

"Quick Meal" Gas Generator, Evaporating. Light it as you do your gas burner. No smell. No danger. No complication. Every objection to the use of a Gasoline Stove done away with. Think of the discomfort mixed in Summer by avoiding the heat of a big Kitchen Range.

"Superior" Cooks and Ranges. Superior as takers. Superior in economy of fuel. Superior in design. Superior in construction. Superior in everything that goes to make a perfect cooking apparatus.

The "Fonts Refrigerators." An ice saver. A Health promoter. Cellular stone lined. What is that? Investigate it. It will more than repay you.

Our stock of Builders' Hardware, House Furnishings, Garden Hose, Lawn Sprinklers, Lawn Mowers, etc., is complete in every detail.
