WHOM TO VOTE FOR.

Utah began her political career under much more favorable circumstances than she began her industrial career. The reason for this is obvious. The commonwealth had to be moulded out of crude and refractory materials, requiring an enormous outlay of time and labor for each little step taken in the march to empire; but when it came to erecting the political structure, the materials were all at hand and in perfect order. The experience through which the great majority of the people had passed, while not essentially a school in which the genius politician was likely to vegetate and out of which there could scarcely be a graduation for him, yet imparted practical lessons in the grand philosophy of true statecraft to leave which was to acquire something not otherwise attainable; so that, when the time came, it only needed a little training in the modus operandi of applied politics—not at all a difficult matter or one involving much time—and presto! we became charged from merely work-a-day, matter-of-fact, business people whose first care was the salvation of the soil and the next the preservation of the body, into politicians among politicians. It is not herein implied that as a body we forsook one condition in order to enter the other by any means. In individual cases this doubtless occurred. Some few there were who could not enter what has proved to be something of a museum pod without going in all over and remaining there, but this is a circumstance that is not at all peculiar to Utah.

Suffice it to say we are all engaged in politics, some more moderately than others, of course, and it is a fitting thing to do occasionally remind the people that this alone will not clothe nor feed them. Good enough in its place and when carried on with moderation, it is still far from being the sine qua non of temporal existence. Through it, affairs of daily concern may be reached, and in no way just now more decidedly than through the election of p legislators. Some few there be who seem to think that this body's functions relate only to the political things, and doubtless a candidate here and there has the same idea. The election of a United States Senator and the enactment of such laws as will benefit the party to which the legislator belongs are, in that case, the be-all and the end-all of the situation. The more of these that are left at home to meditate on the turgititude of republics and the indecency of partisans, the better for the people generally.

To be plain, there is no necessity for the Utah of old being effaced. The Utah of today would be a rickety structure if it were not for the magnificent and enduring foundations upon which it rests as a result of the work which was done when there were no Democrats or Republicans, Populists or Socialists. It is also the case that a disregard for the living present and the promising future absolutely demand that we have "occasional recurrence to fundamental principles" and in no way can this be accomplished more satisfactorily than by a judicious selection of those who are to make the laws.

The subject of irrigation, for example, the most vital as well as most vexed of all the economic subjects with which we have to deal, is, like the pole, ever with us. It exacts our time, our talents, our money, and not infrequently our patience. Legislation bestowed upon it, if characterized by ability and experience, can scarcely be wasted. Now conditions are constantly arising which cannot be anticipated and must be met as they unfold themselves. The political wheel-horse, the professional round-up on election day, the stalwart partisan who is for his party right or wrong, may have as well the necessary knowledge of the subject referred to, and unless his opponent is a better all-around man, let him go to; but if the qualifications enumerated are his entire stock-in-trade, he into pass out, no matter though you have to take chances on someone else.

Our mining laws are not perfect; they are not so anywhere, but the universality of this condition does not justify us in retaining it any longer or to any greater extent than can be avoided.

The unemployed poor in our midst should occasionally have a thought bestowed upon them, which when practicable should be crystallized into law through the various processes of legislation. Of course no such thing as dozen aid is to be thought of; but where enterprises can be encouraged in a proper way by means of which additional avenues of labor will be opened up, it would be a wise and humane thing to do so. If in a course of some little pride is so that the lot of such in Utah is comparatively small and daily growing smaller, but my ing as it exists at all it must be looked after.

There are a number of other things that might be mentioned, but this enumeration will suffice for the present. Those who are equal to the task of grappling with such questions should be given the preference where other things are equal, and the candidate's politics should not be permitted to figure except as the merest incident. It takes no ability to vote for United States Senator. Only the names of acceptable men have so far been suggested for that high station and doubtless the choice will prove to be satisfactory, no matter upon whom it may fall. But to properly discharge the other duties of a legislator demands ability of a high order, together with a resolute and conscientious regard for the welfare of the whole people irrespective of party. Above all, let us have those in the halls of legislation who are not committed to the election of anybody to any place whatever and who are not looking forward to the senatorial contest as a means of replenishing a "lean and hungry" exchequer.

NEW DEPARTURE OF METHODISM

At the session of the Rock River Methodist conference, held last week in Chicago, a proposition was almost unanimously adopted in favor of giving to laymen and clergymen an equal representation at their conferences. This is a new departure in Methodism, and it probably will be adopted as in the various conferences held so far the measure has received 7,601 votes as against 1,431, and the vote of the remaining conferences cannot affect the result.

The Methodist denomination is an offshoot from the English established church and from the parent organization it learned to substitute the voice of the laymen to that of the clergy. In the country there has for a long time been an urgent demand among the Methodists for extended franchise, and this demand is about to be gratified. Laymen can no longer be barred from a voice in the government of the Methodist church.

In 1869 the reformatory movement commenced. It was at first looked upon as a radical departure from the parent tree of Methodism. In 1872 laymen were admitted to the conferences and now they are given an equal representation.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

Reports of a disquieting nature continue to come from the scene of the Indian outbreak in Minnesota. According to the statement of a citizen "believed to be thoroughly reliable," the Pillager Indians are determined to drive the United States troops away from their reservation. No attack has been made upon the settlers and none seems to be contemplated.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer tells the Indian side of the story. The Chippewas, of which the Pillagers form one band, are said to have an excellent reputation for pacific disposition and good conduct. They have adopted civilized ways and dress and prefer peace to fighting.

Lately it was determined to move the Pillager band from their homes on Sheet Rock, or Leech lake, to the White Earth reservation nearer Red river. The Indians objected because they did not wish to leave the country with which they were familiar for an unknown region; nor did they wish to abandon the improvements they had made and commence anew elsewhere. At last, however, they consented on the condition that their improvements should be paid for. This was agreed to and a bill was introduced in Congress for the appropriation of $15,000 for that purpose. The bill was not carried, but the decree for the removal of the Indians remained in force. Then some of the younger chiefs counseled their people to resistance, seeing that resistance was useless, but others declared their determination to die in the old homes rather than to be driven away to die in some other place. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the leader of the malcontents, but a number of the red men rescued him from the officers of the law. Then a military force was sent to aid the officers and the Indians, acting on the support of their old chiefs, ambushed the soldiers, and a fight was the result with a prospect of a general rising among the Chippewas.

From this account it appears that it is the old, old story again repeated. The Indians are expected to stay on their reservations and be good. They generally fulfil this expectation until the settlers come too close and disputes arise. Then "the Indians have to fight which the white men need to respect," and they are told to move on. When this is not done fast enough to suit the intruders, the government steps in and they must submit. But they do so with feelings of bitterness in their hearts and these are not allayed if petitioners they find themselves thrown in the barrain. Then come troubles, and there is another "Indian war." Some of the natives are killed, others imprisoned and the remnant is driven away. Meanwhile we are fighting for humanity and civilization in Cuba.

With regard to the Chippewa trouble the question arises whether it would not have been a good deal cheaper to pay the $15,000 suggested as a suitable compensation for the property of the Pillagers than to send soldiers against them to drive them away from their homes which have learned to love.

Sagasta, the Spanish premier, is described as a stilly bald, frog-faced man, with a strong jaw, a wide, fashion ears pulls and black, filmy eyes, so of an Arab or a gypsy. He has the pile of wealth, the expressive manner and the unfeeling gesture of the south. There is one charge which his most embittered enemies dare not bring against him—that of cowardice. If for many years he has proved himself as supple as a serpent his earlier history showed him to be as brave a a lion. At a lad of 16, when a student at the College of Engineers, at Logrono, his native place, he hoodwinked his teachers to withstand the behests of the dreaded Narvaez. For two years London, Paris and Ostend were the centers of his activity. He engineered the revolution of 1868 and drove Isabella II from the throne. It was because of his direct action in 1871 that the infamous Gen. Burriel shot eight Americans in one day and four days afterward shot Capt. Fry. Gen. Ryan and fifty-eight more. Indeed, of all prime ministers that Spain has ever had, Sagasta has been the most unerring and unstable. He is a Talleyrand, with a strong flavor of Torquemada, says the Chicago Daily News.

The New York World is an enterprising newspaper. Out of its talent and most characteristic experts to set out in its own columns, and contains some little by way of suggestion and information as well as other things. It is as follows:

"The war investigation commission has offered only one excuse for excluding reporters other than those of press associations. That excuse is that there is not room in the apartments occupied. To remedy this, not in its own interest but in the interest of publicity, the World has once again offered to the commission the choice of the seven best public halls in Washington, the World to pay the rent, provided the reporters of all the newspapers should be admitted to the hearings. Yesterday the commission in executive session decided to make no change. That is to say, its purpose that the exclusion of reporters was due only to a lack of room was an unhonest and untruthful one. Obviously the commission does not want reporters to hear and repeat the evidence given before it."

When newspapers resort to vile language and abuse of persons who for some reason or other have incurred their displeasure, and when in addition they almost seek to incite to personal violence, it is time to tell them as emphatically as possible that mob rule does not obtain in Utah. There may be a few who enjoy seeing people hurling epithets at one another and who would be delighted at the spectacle of a victim in the hands of ruffians, but the great majority of the people have protest against even suggestions of that character as an insult to one of the administrators of the law that is the loyal, law-abiding people.

Leslie's Weekly pays the following compliment, which is not at all flattery, in a recent number:

"If all who are born to great wealth would follow the example of Miss Helen Gould, daughter of the late Jay Gould, in the use they make of it, there would be no occasion for the share often cast upon the inheritors of riches. Miss Gould devotes none of her time to the frivolities of fashionable society, and never figures in the solitary social events of the season. Her name is seldom seen in print except in connection with some of the many charitable enterprises in which she is interested and to which she gives continually of her time and most liberally of her means."

The Paris newspapers that advise the Spanish peace commissioners to hold out against the American demands may do so merely in the interest of the hotel keepers; but they may also suppose that Spain by stubbornness can obtain a round sum for the Philippines, which money ultimately would find its way to France.

Two thousand five hundred members of the New York bar have united in a petition to the Democratic and Republican conventions, asking them to nominate unitedly Judge Daly and Judge Cohen for re-election. A better tribute to a judge's ability and integrity could scarcely be paid.

If Germany has any fears to shed or threats to make, let her get right at it, for the Philippines are and all may remain under the protecting aegis of the American flag.

Joseph Heintz and Peter Sorensen went out to Fish's Lake Tuesday and killed two ducks. The young deer were located in the trees around the lake.—Manti Messenger.

Sanpete county is to be congratulated on the newly discovered arboreal fauna; also on the new deer species "Toodie."

The arrest, examination and holding of United States Senator Quay of Pennsylvania on a charge of conspiracy is not conclusive as to his guilt of course, but it has a very bad look outwardly standing.

The Oregon and Iowa are off at last, bound for Manila. They have strayed south and will go the western way. The other, through the Suez canal, would have been much straighter and shorter.

Troops are being forwarded to General Lacon. Let us hope recent experiences of the army are not to be repeated and that plenty of basin will find its way to the troops.
