IS THERE TO BE A "HOLY WAR?"

The rumor that the ecclesiastical head of the Ottoman empire is urging the proclamation of a so-called holy war seems inconsistent with the statement that the sultan is anxious for a termination of hostilities at an early date. When the holy war is proclaimed it is the duty of every true follower of Mohammed to rally for the defense of Islam. All property is to be consecrated for the cause and the whole country to be turned into a vast military camp. There is apparently nothing in the present situation to call for such an outburst of Mohammedan patriotism. Greece is prostrate before the feet of the sultan. If a holy war is to be proclaimed, the Sublime Porte must either be apprehensive of an attack from some power whose overwhelming strength necessitates a union of forces under the green flag of the Arabian prophet; or an attack is contemplated against all the Christians under Turkish rule.

Lately there has been some talk among observers of the signs of the times in Turkey of the probable revival of Mohammedan interests, looking toward a second epoch of Saracen prowess with the sultan at the head. The rumors of a holy war at this time lend support to this suspicion.

PIONEERS PASSING.

Whether it is that the semi-centennial celebration of Utah's settlement gives special prominence to that class of events, or whether this particular period just about terminates the natural lease of life to many who entered the Salt Lake valley in 1847, the present year thus far seems to have a larger record than usual of deaths among those who crossed the plains the first season, and thus became classed among the Utah Pioneers. Among the prominent workers of those early times now called to rest, Sister Elizabeth Brotherton Pratt is among the last who has complied, as yet, with the summons from the other side. Her death occurred Sunday, May 9, in this city. She was an active participant in the scenes immediately prior to the Mormon settlement of Utah. She had listened to the testimony of Mormon Elders in her native city of Manchester, England, and believing it to be a divine message, accepted it in 1840; a year later she came to Nauvoo, and on the 24th day of July, 1843—four years to a day before the institution of Utah's Pioneer Day—she became the wife of Elder Parley P. Pratt, one of the Twelve Apostles, the ceremony being performed in Nauvoo, by the Patriarch Hyrum Smith. In 1846 she was among the Saints driven from Nauvoo, and was with those who spent that winter at Winter Quarters. Her family occupied a wagon that winter, her husband being on a mission, and in her journal she refers thus to the experiences at Winter Quarters, the journey across the plains, and the first year in the Salt Lake valley:

We suffered with cold, hunger and sickness. Our bread was corn meal ground on a hand mill, and not much to go with it. Mr. Pratt returned from his mission in April, after being gone over seven months. In his absence our cattle and horses died and some were lost. When Mr. Pratt returned President Young and a company were camped on the Elk Horn river, twenty miles west, ready to start out as Pioneers to the mountains. After a little rest Mr. Pratt began to prepare to go with a company that was going to start in June. There were [illegible] wagons, and being short of teamsters the women had to drive. I drove an ox team a good part of the way and walked a great many miles. After traveling a long distance we met the Pioneers returning from the valley and camped with them one day. We continued our journey and after many [illegible] trials and hindrances we arrived at our place of destination in September, 1847. This then was a barren, desolate looking place, but we were thankful to be where we could have a rest from our enemies, have peace of mind, and worship the true and living God without any to molest or make afraid. We pitched our tents and had a short winter and very mild one. Early in the spring we commenced to plant our gardens and were blessed with early crops. We appreciated this very much as we had been on short rations all winter. We had to work hard to raise it, as then we did not understand irrigation. The crickets were troublesome, and many of our people suffered for the want of food. We had lost nearly all our cows and the few left were dry.

She has lived to see her co-religionists become a great people in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains; has witnessed the growth and prosperity of Utah for nearly fifty years, and the change of sentiment in that time toward her people; she has seen arise, in these once barren valleys, cities, towns and villages, temples, homes, business houses and public buildings, the railway, the telegraph and other great modern conveniences; has seen a new generation grow up to rejoice in the triumph of the pioneer efforts put forth by herself and associates in opening up a new world, as it were; and her testimony of the divine inspiration and power in the religious cause she espoused fifty-seven years ago was to her dying day as bright, as strong, as positive, as testimony can be. Her testimony in this regard is like that of all the Pioneers, unwavering, and confirmed by the lapse of years. For forty years she has been a widow. A few days ago she met with an accident, which hastened the end of mortality, already approaching close to one who had passed the eightieth milestone, and she goes to her rest one who has earned the rich reward of faithfulness and devotion.

As Sister Pratt and others have passed to the other world, so the remaining Pioneers will pass in their turn; but their work is here—foundation strong and firm, for the glorious work of a great commonwealth. May the present generation learn from the Pioneer example some lessons to aid them in building as wisely and well for the future as did the fathers and mothers of Utah's pioneer day!

WOULD NOT MARRY THEM.

Many years ago, when the tendency to make of marriage a mere civil contract between the parties was becoming marked among the western civilized nations, and was being advocated strongly by "reform" leaders, the conservative religious lights of the time condemned the tendency, and predicted that one of its notable effects would be to drive happiness from the family circle because the sacred religious obligations associated with the union as husband and wife would be lost sight of, and discord would take their place." The later developments in marriage experiences have gone a long way to prove the fulfillment of this prediction. Upon this point, the course of Magistrate Cornell of the Yorkville court in New York, a few days ago, presents a suggestion that has come to the mind of many a civil officer and has received expression; but this is the first case we have heard of where the magistrate has acted upon his conviction in such matters to the extent of refusing to marry a couple who presented themselves. William M. Hillis and Sophia McIntyre appeared before the magistrate, with a request that he perform the ceremony that would make them man and wife. His reply was:

I must decline. I don't care to discourage you, but in my experience on the bench I see too much trouble in married life. I never will perform a marriage ceremony.

Evidently that New York magistrate has had his fill of the discordant strains from marriages that have proved failures in the case of the parties concerned. How far the assumed "reform" spirit of the age is answerable for the unpleasant condition might be a very interesting question.

THIS YEAR'S ICEBERGS.

There probably has been no season in the history of transatlantic trade in which so many craft have come to grief as a result of encounters with the giants from the Arctic glaciers, says the New York Mail and Express. The blockade is still at its height and is drifting directly across the two steamship lines. So great has been the disaster this year to vessel property through ice, that the principal transatlantic steamship companies have directed their vessels to cross longitude 49 in latitude 41, going west, and in latitude 40.10 going east. These routes will, it is thought, bring the vessels southward of the ice and even of the fog belt. The danger of meeting ice on the banks of Newfoundland is intensified by the fact that it is the exception and not the rule for a craft to sight the ice in clear weather. Our New York contemporary gives a with a long list of disasters that have occurred the past three months, by vessels going into ice at a more southerly point than has been known before. The record is a rather formidable one, and goes to show that the number of lives on the waters has increased this year in proportion with that on the land, as shown through recent disasters. But the big ocean steamer that must find the safest way for the transfer of their human freight, since the adoption of the southern route, which, while its increased distance causes loss of time, yet makes up for it in the additional safety afforded.

Accidents with sharp-pointed instruments in the hands of children always are especially dangerous, notwithstanding the fact that the child may be quite careful; for the little ones always are more particularly liable to stumble and fall, or to be knocked over, than are larger and older persons. For instance, on Wednesday last, at New York, Louisa Matilda Johnson, a four-year-old child, was on the edge of a flight of stairs, holding a pair of scissors, when she lost her balance and fell, with the shears in her hand. One of the blades pierced her breast and the other penetrated her heart, killing her instantly.

The day before the United States Senate voted on the proposed arbitration treaty the New York World said editorially:

The ratification of the treaty will give new glory to the American idea which "stands for the reign of reason as opposed to the reign of force—for argument, peaceful discussion and lawful adjustment, as opposed to passion and war."

Evidently the Senate did not have much desire for the "new glory" in the way they turned down the treaty by a vote of two to one against it.

Vick's Magazine makes this comment in connection with a mention of Arbor-day tree-planting:

There is inspiration in the knowledge that judicious tree-planting is work done for the ages. The man who leaves this world, having beautified it with trees to bless those coming after, surely has not lived in vain. Not many of us may be privileged to build enduring monuments of stone, but it is the privilege of each reader of these words to plant a tree or trees, which shall bestow blessing for generations after he has gone.

The Greeks have been badly beaten in the war, yet their losses in men have not been half as great as those of the Turks, whose aggregate 25,000 men up to date—more than the entire Greek army engaged in actual fighting.

The outcome of the Turko-Greek war has lessened confidence in the Greek ability to fight, but has not inspired any new confidence in Turkey's real progress to a higher civilization.

The lowering range of the temperature has had a depressing effect on the threatened high waters; it also has deterred the mosquito season a few weeks.

Do not forget that the city of Brooklyn is no more. It is now Greater New York.
