DESERET EVENING NEWS.

SUNDAY, - - JULY 2, 1893.

FRAGMENTS.

Tuesday was a regular harvest of Fourth of July incidents in the police court this morning and Clerk Emmert was busy from early during the entire session checking up cases.

A Colorado magazine, Harper's, of the West Lake Mosque, was lately lost in Salt Lake recently by falling down a railway. He was on his 5th pint when before unpopularly parched. He was subsequently brought in the city and taken home, where medical assistance was rendered.

Among the youthful patrons who had exclusive experience with Fourth of July fireworks yesterday was the little son of H. S. Prescott, the well known broker. The amount was not a very serious one although the child is minus his eyebrows, eyelashes and a part of his hair. The mishap was caused by dropping an opened firecracker into a small box of powder.

FAIR CORRESPONDENCE.

Timothy Tells Utah People How and When to See the Exposition.

Editor Evening News:

In my last letter I promised the readers of the NEWS to tell them how to see the Fair, what to see and when best to see it. Before going into details I will give a few general hints of interest to Utah people. It may be well to state that up to the present time we have had over 700 visitors from Utah who have registered at the Utah building, and from what the representatives of other states say, I am pleased to state that the proportion of visitors from Utah is larger than that from any state or territory in the West. All Utah visitors express themselves as being well pleased with the Fair and especially Utah's exhibit. W. H. Rowe, of the Z. C. M. I. told me the other day that in his opinion the Columbian Exhibition is the greatest show of the kind that has ever been made up to the present time, and he did not believe that it would be possible for any other country except the United States to make such an Exposition as this one.

Speaking of the Exposition generally, he said it was the grandest conception and the best carried out better executed than any other Exposition the world has ever known. He spoke of the organization and system at arranging the buildings and architecture, all combining to make one grand picture which alone is worth a trip to Chicago. Speaking of the exhibit he said that they were better and more artistically arranged than anything he had ever dreamed of. In regard to Utah in particular, he was exceedingly well pleased and complimented the committee upon the work they had done, saying that he could not suggest anything in the way of improvement. He thought more had been accomplished for the money expended than any one could reasonably expect. He admitted that he was surprised and disappointed, not agreeably so, Utah's exhibit in every department is far superior to what he had been led to expect. He also said that any Utah citizen who visited the Fair and complained of Utah's exhibit, could not be satisfied with anything in this world, and he did not think that the commission should trouble themselves because a few found fault, as he was satisfied that the great mass of Utah people who visited the Fair were of the same opinion; in fact he had talked with a great many of them and they all joined with him in saying that the Utah exhibit is par excellence.

How to see the Fair.—In the first place you must come to Chicago. That is a self evident proposition, because you cannot see the World's Fair unless you visit the Exposition. This is a serious proposition to many people on account of the stringency of the money market, and a great many think they cannot afford to come to Chicago and spend two or three weeks and considerable money sightseeing. Ordinarily it would be prudent to practice economy but as this Exposition only lasts six months, and is only intended to run a portion of the year 1893, it is reasonable to suppose that another opportunity will not present itself in the near future, possibly not within the lifetime of a great many people who are now dreaming of seeing the Exposition and all things considered, a sacrifice of both time and money would be proper on an occasion of this kind.

In my last letter I mentioned the fact of expenses, and how much it would cost to visit the World's Fair. I have no reason at this time to change the figures given and I have no hesitancy in saying, that anyone that can possibly raise a sufficient sum to come to Chicago, will admit after they have visited the Exposition that the money was well spent.

It is sometimes wise to postpone doing a particular thing, when another opportunity will present itself in the near future. When it will be more convenient; but another opportunity to visit the Exposition the 19th will not present itself. Therefore I would advise, as I have said before, a sacrifice on the part of everyone, in order that they may visit the Exposition. Possibly the answer to the question as to how to visit the Fair will not be satisfactory to a great many people. I remember and the old saying, that "where there's a will there's a way."

What to see.—When you arrive in Chicago, the first thing that will present itself will be what to see. I will say frankly that the average visitor cannot see all the Fair in ten days. They cannot see half of it in ten days but as most people are interested in some particular branch of industry or art, they can see the things that they are most interested in and get a general impression of the Fair in ten days. The farmer, if he is especially interested in agriculture, and of course he will be, will want to see the agriculture department and the live stock show. The first thing you do after getting located is to purchase a guide book with a map of the Fair grounds and get the location of the main buildings. If you wish to visit the agricultural department you should go there early in the morning and go through the building in a systematic way. In the south end you will find the farm machinery. In the central portion you will find the agricultural exhibits of several states. In the galleries you will find special exhibits of an interesting character, including the wool exhibit of the Department of Agriculture. In the machinery department of agriculture the wool exhibit of the Department of Agriculture. In the machinery department every known implement of agriculture can be found. In the central portion you will find the exhibits of the states of the union, and the several exhibits of the earth, also stored away in exhibit about the products of the soil which they have on exhibition. Most farmers will find this the most interesting section of the agricultural building. You can see and have explained to you the mode of farming in every portion of the globe and you can compare the products of the soil, such as wheat and other common grains, with that of your own section, and here let me say, that no farmer from Utah will have reason to be ashamed of the wheat and grain product from Utah, after he has compared them with the same products from other portions of the globe. In the wool section a very interesting exhibit is presented, the wools of all nations are here grouped together in every way of weave, and particularly be compared, and the wool grower who will give careful attention and make inquiries, can gather a great deal of useful information that will be very beneficial.

The agricultural department is not the only one in which the farmer will be interested. Utah fruit growers can learn a great deal about the character of fruit, if they will give some attention to this department, they will be of lasting benefit to them in the production of fruit for the market. Many devices for the destruction of insect pests are shown which Utah fruit growers should be specially interested in, and I would advise the people who visit the Fair from Utah who are any way interested in fruit, to give some time to this department as it will be of great benefit to the community at large.

The art student will be interested in every portion of the Fair, and in the Art Building especially. The whole Exposition is one grand aggregation of art of the highest character, all is displayed in every department. The artistic arrangement of the Exposition, the landscape, and the architectural beauty of the buildings, will make any one who is at all interested in art, feel as though they had dropped into fairyland. To embrace it all in a word, the World's Exposition is the greatest artistic conception that man has ever produced.

People who want to get a general idea of what is produced in the world, can learn something by a visit to the manufacture and liberal arts building. Here they will find a collection that is unsurpassed. Every country almost on the globe, is here represented, and the handiwork of man is displayed to the very best advantage. At every step you learn something new and the impression is nothing more than you can gain from books, and especially to the young person is a visit to this building interesting and beneficial. It gives them a better idea of the world and the arts, industries and resources of the several countries than it is possible to gain by any other means. They come in contact with people from all quarters of the globe, and learn of their customs, their manners of life, and the lesson taught can never be forgotten.

In the mining building, the miner, slightly will be especially interested and can learn more of the mineral productions of the world by a study at this exhibit than it would be possible to gain in months by study. Every known product of the mine is here exhibited, the mode of working, the treatment of ores, and all is practically illustrated. The mode of gathering diamonds in the South African diamond fields is shown, the manner of cutting the stones and polishing them so that you can see the diamond taken from the mine and follow it through every process until it comes out a perfect gem, cut and polished ready for the market.

Utah people who arrive in Chicago should first visit the Utah building and register, so that their friends can find them to see they wish to look them up. You can make appointments to meet friends at the building, and after tramping around for several hours you will find it a very comfortable place to rest and rest. The officials of the building will make you welcome, furnish you with any information possible and do anything they can for your convenience. It is the Utah home at the Fair and every resident of Utah should take advantage of it.

You should visit the Fair when it will test out your convenience. Up to the present time the weather has been simply delightful. We have not had a single warm day, although it is possible that during July we may have some hot weather. The great crowds will visit the Fair during September and October, and then the Fair will possibly be at its best as many of the agricultural products grown this year will be on exhibition. I would not advise anyone, however, to postpone visiting the Fair until fall, if they are ready to see it now. The weather is uncertain to be considered, and from the present indications I do not think that we are going to have any extreme hot weather this season. A few days may be oppressive, but most of the buildings are so arranged that they will be cool and comfortable during the warmest weather. Therefore, my advice would be to visit the Fair whenever you are ready, and do not wait on the weather. Possibly I should not say so to those with young children, that they should come down during July and August, with this exception I would say to all that they should come when they get ready.

Executive Commissioner Empey, after having spent two months in Chicago and giving his personal attention to the arrangement of exhibits and getting everything in shape, has returned home. Every one here speaks in the highest terms of his work and of his popularity among the officials or other states at being the most careful and pains-taking executive commissioner who has thus far visited the Exposition.

His work speaks for itself. He will return later in the season to see the Fair. During the two months that he was here, he was so busily engaged that he scarcely had an opportunity to see anything except the Utah exhibit.
