MEXICO'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT.

The world has seen no greater sanitary project than that having for its object the drainage of the ancient American capital, the City of Mexico. It has excited the most intense interest among engineers everywhere; its history has hardly been more romantic than tragic; and its accomplishment removes a menace that has existed ever since the very beginning of the rare old city. For at least three centuries it has presented a problem which scientific skill has wished and aimed to solve. Its antiquity has in no way detracted from its interest and importance, nor have its claims to public attention been either diminished or postponed by reason of historic tragedies with which the city has been associated, or of national vicissitudes through which the distracted country has passed. But the Mexico of the nineteenth century has solved the problem, and is witnessing the completion of that which has been long recognized as a national need though in some respects considered an unattainable dream.

At a dinner party in this city on the occasion of his recent visit, Senator Stephen B. Elkins, who had lately come from the land of the Montezumas, gave a luminous account of the work that was being done in this great undertaking, then nearing success. From a recollection of his remarks, and from a late article in the Age of Steel, the following facts are obtained. By way of introduction it will be proper to remind those who have been in Mexico's capital, and to inform those who have never been there, that the city, though at a considerable elevation above the sea, is so situated in a scoop of the Cordilleras as to have no natural outlet for drainage purposes. This is a sanitary sense was a constant menace to the public health, and was probably responsible for a heavy death rate. In case of sudden and prolonged rains inundations were not uncommon, and grave damage to property imminent. The Texcoco lake was a basin for the streams, but when these were overtaxed the rim of the basin was no protection for the surrounding country. To remedy these evils, modern engineering has attempted a great task and succeeded. By means of a canal and of a tunnel under the hills the drainage of the valley finds its way to the Gulf of Mexico. The canal is twenty-nine miles long and the tunnel is a little more than six miles. The cost so far has been about $12,000,000. Aside from the purpose of drainage, the canal can be of service in local navigation, and may be of more or less use in irrigation.

There can be no question that in a sanitary sense it will do much for popularizing the City of Mexico as a health resort, and remove an old-time bugbear from the reputation of an historic and beautiful city. As indicating the progressive spirit now dominant in our sister republic, and the destiny to which it is moving, the completion of this engineering task is worthy of note, and signifies a great deal. Whatever may be thought of end of President Diaz in other respects, his encouragement of and perseverance in this mighty work will redound to his fame and credit as long as Mexico shall have an existence of history be written.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The foreign policy of the United States is at present the subject of serious contemplation in England, owing especially to the Venezuela and Cuban questions. It is recognized on all hands that this country has become a powerful factor in the affairs of the western continent, and that in any dispute with the smaller countries, the Washington government must be taken into consideration. In the present trouble between Venezuela and England, the interference of the United States does not go any further than a suggestion that the matter be referred to arbitrators, but this proposition, it is thought, is backed by claims, which if logically carried out, would necessitate armed interference by the United States in behalf of Venezuela, in case of actual hostilities.

Speaking of the situation, a London paper, from an English point of view, sums up as follows:

Europe must understand that the people of the United States are decided, first of all, to insist, if necessary with the bayonet and rifle, any extension of European domination, secondly, that popular sentiment in the United States enthusiastically favors every insurrectionary movement which aims at the removal of a European flag from American soil. This will entail expenditures and complications. But these facts are not clearly seen yet by the American citizens who blunders blindfolded but heading into what need to be called the path of manifest destiny.

The position of the United States is defined by the much-talked-of Monroe doctrine, as stated in the message to Congress in 1823. At that time Spain was endeavoring to avail the aid of the so-called holy alliance, consisting of Russia, Prussia, France and Austria, to reacquire her lost colonies, and it appeared that the powers were too willing to render assistance. Russia claimed the right to extend her possessions, by means of colonization, from Alaska southward, along the Pacific coast. Referring to these facts, Monroe stated:

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power, we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

This is the celebrated Monroe doctrine, endorsed by all American statesmen. It recognizes the establishment on this continent of European systems of government on the ruins of those already existing, as a menace to the liberty of this republic and consequently as an unfriendly act to the United States, which this country is, for obvious reasons, bound to resent.

The most notable illustration of its application is furnished by the history of Mexico. When Napoleon III landed his troops in that country and established an empire on the European plan, the United States notified France that the proceeding must lead to war between these two countries. The War of Rebellion then raged, and France was in a position to ignore this warning. But no sooner were our own domestic difficulties settled than troops were sent to the Mexican frontier, and the French speedily withdrew.

A number of newspaper writers lately have claimed that the United States by virtue of the Monroe doctrine is under obligation to protect any American country against the acquisition of territory by European powers. This is, however, looked upon as a new principle and a new policy to which our government is not committed.

The Monroe doctrine itself, as originally enunciated, deals with the establishment of European systems of government in the western world, and with the maintenance of the American governments whose independence has already been acknowledged.

PATTERNS OF SOLDIERSHIP.

The claims of western nations to superiority over their eastern neighbors in the arts of both peace and war are not all possible of acceptance until something more than mere say-so shall be advanced in their support. As to war, there seems to be no doubt that, comparing the two latest exhibitions, the Japanese in Formosa have shown themselves far in advance of the French in Madagascar, although the former had much the more difficult task. Comparisons are said to be odious—to the French they certainly must be in the case in question. In the matter of climate Formosa is worse than Madagascar; the Black Flags and other irregular Chinese levies were more formidable opponents than the Hovas; the French employed 15,000 men for a task which could have been carried out, according to their own officers, by 3,000, backed by 1,500 or 2,000 Soudanese. They have lost 6,000 by fever, aided by mismanagement. The Japanese, on the other hand, did not do any such bungling. They threw 60,000 troops into Formosa, and relieved their men so cleverly that none of the soldiers was kept on the island long enough to fall a victim to the local conditions. The whole campaign has not cost them half as many lives as the French have lost. Such is the judgment of an acute critic in the New York Evening Sun—one who has kept close watch of the progress of events in both countries. As to Madagascar, it will be remembered by the French people as Tonquin is; but the remembrance of a campaign marked by incompetency, blundering, lack of preparation and slow or no action, will not rise up from Formosa to vex the thoughts of the sturdy Japs.

WHAT PAUPERISM COSTS IN ENGLAND can be gathered from a British exchange just issued and containing the poor rate return for the year ended Lady Day, 1894. The principal items of expenditure were: In maintenance, £2,195,912; out-relief, £4,489,503; maintenance of lunatics in asylums or licensed houses, £1,494,183; workhouses or other house repairs, and interest thereon, £317,062; salaries and rations of officers and superannuation allowances, £1,529,081; other expenses, £1,242,852; total, £9,875,593, or $48,307,548. In comparing the expenditure of 1893 with that of 1894, under every item in the latter year there was an increase. Of these figures it can be seen that it costs three and a half million pound, sterling to distribute a little over a millions to the poor and the lunatics.

THE MISSIONARY REVIEW of the World publishes the following as a specimen of prayers offered up by devout Mohammedans:

O, God, bestow blessing upon our lord Mohammed the beloved, and upon his father Abraham the friend, and upon his brother Moses the word, and upon the faithful Jesus the Spirit of God, and upon David and Solomon and Zachariah and John the Baptist and their people, as long as the thoughtful some remember them, and the thoughtless omit neglect to think of them.

A CENSUS of centenarians recently taken in France gives 212 persons at one hundred years of age, 147 of them women and 65 men. The oldest was a woman who had just died at one hundred and fifty, in a village of the department of Haute Garonne. Nearly all the centenarians belonged to the lowest ranks in life.

POLITICAL PARTIES in the midst of a campaign are more sensitive and fearful than the typical maiden lady of mature years who never dared to shut her eyes to sleep without first having disappointed herself in seeking a bad burglar under her bed.

A PECULIARITY of every convention and of every nominating speech is that the particular candidate "I am about to name is eminently qualified for the position."

CUBA AND Cuban sympathizers are clamorous that the American republic accord them "belligerent rights." But they seem to be taking them, and that ought to be good enough.

"ALL MEN are Liars," is the title of one of the newest books. The critics are generally pleased to regard it as a work of fiction.

What Prominent Insurance Men Say.

H. M. Blossom, senior member of H. M. Blossom & Co., 117 N. 3d st., St. Louis, writes: I had been laid with a very distressing cough, the result of influenza, which nothing seemed to relieve, until I took Ballard's Horehound Syrup. One bottle completely cured me. I sent one bottle to my sister, who had a severe cough, and she experienced immediate relief. I always recommend this syrup to my friends.

A Wonderful Conqueror.

No disease is more common among the people than scrofula. Handed down from generation to generation, it is found in nearly every family, in some form. It may make the appearance in dreadful running sores, in swelling in the neck or gathers, or in eruptions of varied forms. Although the disease manifests itself in many ways, it may be known be correctly described by the fact that it may be, and often is, the prime cause of consumption.

In whatever form scrofula may manifest itself, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the universally acknowledged remedy. Its unrivaled success in overcoming all scrofulous humors, even when all other means have failed, and the blood is made rich, pure and healthy.
