Mexican News.

CINCINNATI, 2.—The Gazette's New Orleans special says that advices from the Mexican capital to the 27th have been received. They state that the Mexican Congress had approved the contract by the government with Daniel Beryle Blair, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Guaymas to the frontier, between the State of Sonora and the American territory of Arizona, with branches from Guaymas to Ures and Alamos. The obligations require the main line to be constructed in five years. The government grants to the company twenty-two thousand acres for every mile of road built, and agrees to pay forty thousand dollars each year for five years. On the 2nd ult., the Committee on Industry presented to the Mexican Congress a report recommending the approval of the contract between the executive and El Plumb, for the construction of a railroad from the city of Leon to a point on the north frontier, on the Rio Bravo. The Mexican Congress resolved itself into a grand jury on the same date, to consider the impeachment on charges made by Vincentre against Riva Palaco, which discussion resulted in his acquittal by a vote of 128 to 10. No efforts are being made by Mexico to stop the depredations on the frontier.

HOW TO PROCURE SLEEP.

We read of Bismarck that "his old foe, insomnia, still tenaciously clings to him. He passes whole nights waking. At morning dawn, slumber, if not sleep, comes at last, but day finds him weary and unfit for work, yet with "mountains of work to get through." Having paid considerable attention to this important question of being able to procure sleep, I venture to record what I know about it.

The human frame cannot do without sleep. I believe the reason is that the mysterious property—for want of a better name we call it "vital energy"—gradually leaks out during the day. During sleep the machinery of the body, especially the brain, becomes recharged with it. The cause of not being able to sleep—I write now of people in good health and hard workers with their brains—is that the brain cannot, so to speak, "go down," but it continues to act, more or less. My father, when writing the "Bridgeport Treatise," had his own way of working. He was an excessively busy man during the day, and had only the night hours in which he could write. He generally dined at seven o'clock, and immediately after dinner went to sleep for two or three hours. He then got up and worked on until two or three o'clock in the morning. Just before retiring he took some light pudding or a sandwich, with cocoa or milk. Thus he always slept well, as the blood was diverted from the brain to the stomach.

I have no hesitation in saying that the proper thing to do is to go to sleep immediately or at least very soon after the meal of the day. All animals always go to sleep, if they are not disturbed, after eating. This is especially noticeable in dogs, and the great John Hunter showed by an experiment that digestion went on during sleep more than when the animal was awake and going about. This is his experiment: He took two dogs and gave them both the same quantity of food. One of them was then allowed to go to sleep; the other was taken out hunting. At the end of three or four hours he killed both these dogs. The food in the stomach of the dog which had been asleep was quite digested; in that of the one which had been hunting the food was not digested at all.

The fact, I think, shows the advisability of going to sleep immediately after eating. This ignored fact always occurs to my memory when I see old gentlemen nodding over their wine. Nature says to them, "Go to bed." They will not go to bed, but still nature will not allow her law to be broken, so she sends them to sleep sitting in the chairs. People, therefore, who feel sleepy after dinner ought to dine late, and go straight to bed when a sleepy feeling comes over them.

Most good folks, however, do the worst possible thing imaginable; they retire altogether into the drawing room, and then, to make matters worse, they drink tea and coffee. Now I regard tea and coffee, when taken at night, to be poison to certain constitutions. It is very well in the morning, but it is very bad at night. The reason why tea and coffee should not be taken at night is that one contains an alkaloid called caffein, and the other one called theine. These two alkaloids taken into the system stimulate the brain and do not allow it to go to rest. I speak of this matter from experience. If I take thoughtlessly a cup of tea or coffee after five o'clock in the evening, going to bed about eleven, I cannot go to sleep; and if the brain does fall asleep, the alkaloid will wake it up in an hour or two. Sleeplessness, therefore, is usually caused by tea or coffee, though, strange to say, tea and coffee actually send some people into sound slumber.

I well recollect the late Dr. Wilberforce, then Bishop of Oxford, telling my father, then most actively engaged as Dean of Westminster, of his patent way of going to sleep. It is better than the old-fashioned prescription of watching sheep jumping through a hedge one after another, ships sailing out to sea, &c. The Bishop's prescription was to repeat very slowly the vowels A E I O. In doing this, they were to be faintly pronounced with each inspiration and expiration. It will be found easy to do this without moving the lips, but the vowel U must not be pronounced, for to do this the muscular action of the lips necessarily takes place, and sleep comes not. I advise my readers to try this plan.

The deepest sleep is always just before dawn. It is, I believe, probable that some change takes place at this time in the atmospheric conditions, as the hour just before dawn is selected by wakefulness to make their attack, and it is at this time also, I believe, that a great proportion of children are born.

I now venture to suggest a new but simple remedy for want of sleep. Opiates in any form, even the liquor opii sedat, and chloroform, will leave traces of their influence the next morning. I therefore prescribe for myself—and have frequently done so for others—onions; simply common onions raw, but Spanish onions stewed will do. Everybody knows the taste of onions; this is due to a peculiar essential oil contained in this most valuable and healthy root. This oil has, I assure, high-opiate powers. In my own case they never fail. If I am much pressed with work, and feel I shall not sleep, I eat two or three small onions, and the effect is magical. Onions are also excellent things to eat when much exposed to intense cold. Mr. Farnaby, Troutdale Fishery, Keswick, informs me that when collecting salmon and trout eggs in the winter, he finds that common raw onions enable him and his men to bear the ice and cold of the semi-frozen water much better than spirits, beer, &c. The Arctic expedition, just now about to start, should therefore take a good stock of onions. Finally if a person cannot sleep, it is because the blood is in the brain, not in the stomach; the remedy therefore, is obvious: call the blood down from the brain to the stomach. This is to be done by eating a biscuit, a hard boiled egg, a bit of bread and cheese, or something. Follow this up with a glass of whisky milk, or even water, and you will fall asleep, and will, I trust, bless the name of the writer.—Frank Buckland's Land and Water.
