KILLED IN THE MINE.

Fire Damp Explodes Causing the Loss of Many Lives.

TWENTY-THREE BODIES FOUND.

Further Account of the Catastrophe at Fire Cañon, Eighteen Miles from Wenatchee, Washington.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 8.—A Wenatchee, Wash., special says:

The fire damp explosion at Fire Canyon, located about 18 miles from the town of Leavenworth, in the Cascade mountains, in Chelan county, Washington, and in connection of all the principal and undeniable.

In the tunnel which runs near the top of the mountain, there are 23 men in the tunnel, and twenty of them are dead, while only two of all who were in the mine when the explosion occurred, lived to tell the story of the tragical catastrophe and their own miraculous escape.

The explosion occurred shortly after 4 o'clock, when the night shift was ready to relieve the day shift and the miners were preparing the shot and tools for the men to take the places of the men below. The shock of the explosion caused by an accumulation of fire damp, which was exploded by a spark in the tunnel of the gangway. The men in the mine who were working in the tunnel are badly injured, and a number of those who were working in the tunnel have been taken out dead. Of those who are injured, many of them will not be able to recover, while others are expected to be crippled for life. The shock of the explosion was felt in Leavenworth, which is 18 miles from the mine, and some from Cashmere, which is 12 miles from the mine, and, the tunnel is 2 miles in length, and the men are scattered all over the tunnel.

Some 150 men were in the tunnel when the explosion occurred, and the men who were in the tunnel were all killed, and the men who were in the tunnel were all killed, and the men who were in the tunnel were all killed
