WEYLER'S BAPTISM.

Insurgent's Surprise Him Outside the Village of Cayara.

ANOTHER WAR VESSEL CAPTURED.

Spanish Troops Can only Interfere With a Fine Salute to Cuban Ports for Inspection.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—A dispatch to the Herald from Havana says:

General Weyler has now had his baptism of fire in the field. He has even have been relieved of by the gallantry of the field of the insurgent and saved his very life. A full account of the affair is not yet at hand, but it appears that the Cuban forces are trying the destruction of property in the region of the capital, and that the Spanish troops have been moved from place to place in the vicinity of Havana, where they have been actively working with Spanish troops.

From what we can learn of the affair it appears that the insurgent forces in the region of Cayara, which is a village on the road to Guines, Cuanas, and Jaruco, attacked the Spanish troops on the night of the 19th, and that the Spanish troops were compelled to retire from the village of Cayara, which was then set on fire by the insurgents. The Spanish troops then retreated to the village of Guines, where they were joined by General Weyler, who was in the vicinity of the village of Cayara, and who had been with a force of troops in the region of Guines, Cuanas, and Jaruco, and who had been out for the purpose of cutting off the insurgents who had been in the region of Cayara. The Spanish troops then attacked the insurgents, who had taken up a position in the village of Cayara, and drove them out of the village, and then set it on fire. The insurgents then retreated to the mountains, and the Spanish troops then retreated to the village of Guines, where they were joined by General Weyler, who had been
