About one year ago, the firm, Mr. Ruff, of Ruff's Spring Sole, lost his hair after fever and needle gravel took. He finally resorted to our Arco Hair Wash, and now has as fine a head of hair as could be desired. This is certainly a fact worth remembering.

THEORY BUT NOT PRACTICE.

To the Editor:

I frequently drop into the Salt Lake City Tabernacle Sunday afternoons. This is for everybody, if what I am going to write should seem to be in opposition or misrepresentation, and yet it is necessary that I have to declare that I am either, while I am a member of a church to be neither all the one nor the other.

I go to the Tabernacle mentioned because that I will hear something I will enjoy and which will do me good. My heart leaves the chair. Mr. Cannon and the organ entirely suit. The music thus is not always satisfactory, but as I have no right to complain I never do so. Many speakers I cannot hear well; other are more like educated parrots than inspired men, but some there are to whom speaking I like to listen. One of them is President George Q. Cannon. I may hear him quite well and he is never tiresome if it be he is a speaker. He is a good Father-in-Israel, and while I cannot always agree with him, I like to hear him.

I heard him last Sunday afternoon. His sermon was a practical talk to the people. Full of useful advice and helpful hints. He dwelt at some length on the importance of the Latter-day Saints acting each other and keeping after that spirit which allowed no class distinctions, or with which such was the case at his thought. It was advised that caught to be acted upon in every man, woman and child in the world, in the kingdom of God, or the one of perfection, can ever be realized, one or even until it is not into practice. I am sure that I have felt the spirit in the sermon, and among as all where I could hear all without being in the war of opinions who had better right there than myself. I asked a person in authority there if the seats were reserved. The reply was, "No; but I am aware of a set of names he knows. I therefore held down a good seat. When the house was well filled below, an elderly woman came in who wanted a front seat. In those benches arranged diagonally in front of the stand were gentlemen and ladies, but there was room for many more. This woman appealed to the person who had informed me that seats were not reserved and he refused to admit her to one of those empty seats. She was in fashionable attire, and I dared even myself dressed, and I could not but feel that it was her appearance that caused her to be refused a seat. I thought of the women's clothing and the Master of the meal talk with as little in it, and could not but compare the inventory of the afternoon with the practice of the evening. There was no room for the poor woman beside me, so I gave her my seat and found it much less satisfactory than thinking that the exhibition of authority and snobbishness I did seen was quite the war of the world, but, now, the less contemptible.
