THE EVENING NEWS.

Wednesday, - - - March, 22, 1871.

THE CRIMINAL WITNESS.

I left the court room and went to the prosecuting attorney, and asked him for the letters I had handed him—the ones that had been stolen from the mail bag. He gave them to me and having selected one I returned the rest and told him that I would see he had the one I kept before night. I then returned to the court room and the case went on.

Mrs. Naseby resumed her testimony. She said she had entrusted the room to prisoner's care, and that no one else had access there save herself. Then she described about missing the money, and closed by telling how she found $25 of the missing money in the prisoner's trunk. She could swear it was the identical money she had lost, in two tens and one five dollar bank notes.

"Mrs. Naseby," said I, "when you at first missed the money had you any reason to believe the prisoner had taken it?"

"No, sir," she answered.

"Had you ever before detected her in any dishonesty?"

"No, sir."

"Should you have thought of searching her trunk had not Nancy Luther advised and informed you?"

"No, sir."

Mrs. Naseby left the stand and Nancy Luther took her place. She came up with a bold look, and upon me she cast a defiant look, as if to say, "Trap me if you can." She gave her evidence as follows:

She said that on the night the money was taken she saw the prisoner going up stairs, and from the sly maner in which she went up she suspected all was not right. So she followed her up. "Elizabeth went to Mrs. Naseby's room and shut the door after her. I stooped down and looked through the keyhole, and saw her take the money and put it in her pocket. Then she stooped down and picked up the lamp, and as I saw she was coming up I hurried away."

Then she went on, told how she had informed her mistress of this, and how she proposed to search the girl's trunk.

I recalled Mrs. Naseby to the stand.

"You said that no one save yourself and the prisoner, had access to your room," I said. "Now, could Nancy Luther have entered the room if she wished."

"Certainly, sir; I meant that no one else had any right there."

I saw that Mrs. Naseby, though naturally a hard woman, was somewhat moved by poor Elizabeth's misery.

"Could your cook have known, by any means in your knowledge, where your money was?"

"Yes, sir; for she his often come to my room while I was there, and I have often give her money to buy provisions of market men who happened to come along with their wagons."

"One more question: Have you known of the prisoner having used any money since this was stolen?"

"No, sir."

I now called Nancy Luther back, and she began to tremble a little, though her look was as bold and defiant as ever.

"Miss Luther," I said, "why did you not inform your mistress at once of what you had seen, without waiting for her to ask about the lost money?"

"Because I could not at once make up my mind to expose the poor girl," she answered promptly.

"You say you looked through the keyhole and saw her take the money?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where did she place the lamp when she did so?"

"On the bureau."

"In your testimony you said she stooped down when she picked it up. What do you mean by that?"

The girl hesitated, and finally she said she did not mean anything, only that she picked up the lamp.

"Very well," said I; "how long have you been with Mrs. Naseby?"

"Not quite a year, sir."

"How much does she pay you a week?"

"A dollar and three quarters."

"Have you taken up any of your pay since you have been there?"

"Yes, sir."

"How much?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Why don't you know?"

"How should I? I have taken it at different times, just as I wanted it, and kept no account."

"Now, if you had wished to harm the prisoner, could you have raised twenty-five dollars to put in her trunk?"

"No, sir," she replied with virtuous indignation.

"Then you have not laid up any money since you have been there?"

"No, sir, only what Mrs. Naseby may owe me."

"Then you did not have twenty-five dollars when you came there?"

"No, sir; and what's more, the money found in the girl's trunk was the money Mrs. Naseby lost. You might have known that if you'd remember what you asked her." This was said very sarcastically, and was intended as a crusher upon the idea that she should have put the money in the prisoner's trunk. However, I was not overcome entirely.

"Will you tell me if you belong to this State?"

"I do, sir."

"In what town?"

She hesitated, and for an instant the bold look forsook her. But she finally answered. I next turned to Mrs. Naseby.

"Do you ever take a receipt from the girls when you pay them?"

"Always."

"Can you send and get one of them for me?"

"She has told you the truth, sir, about the payments," said Mrs. Naseby.

"Oh, I don't doubt it," I replied; "but particular proof is the thing for the court room. So, if you can, I wish you would procure the receipt."

She said she would willingly go if the Court said so. The Court did say so, and she went. Her dwelling was not far off, and she soon returned and handed me four receipts, which I took and examined. They were signed in a strange, staggering hand by the witness.

"Now, Nancy Luther," I said, turning to the witness, and speaking in a quick, startling tone, at the same time looking her sternly in the eye, "please tell the Court and jury, and me, where you got the seventy-five dollars you sent in your letter to your sister in Somers?"

At this she started as though a volcano bursted at her feet. She turned pale as death, and every limb shook violently. I waited until the people could have an opportunity to see her emotion, and then I repeated the question.

"I—never—sent—any," she gasped.

"You did!" I thundered, for I was excited now.
