THE EVENING NEWS.

S Sunday, Sept. 15, 1872

EASTERN NOTES.

A farmer in Washington county, Ky., has found a practical use for a snake. For two years he has had one shut up in his corn crib, and during all that time not a live mouse has been seen there.

New Hampshire imposes a fine of $2 for every egg destroyed belonging to robbins, thrushes, larks, bluebirds, sparrows, martins, woodpeckers, bobolinks, yellow-birds, linnets, fly-catchers, warblers, plovers, yellow-legs, sand-snipes, patridges, grouse, quails, and wild pigeons.

Thurlow Weed is in feeble health, and supposed by many to be quite near his end. The venerable politician is spending his last strength upon his "Reminiscences," which cover a long space of time, and contain interesting memoranda of many famous men now dead. His daughter acts as his amanuensis.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, of Sep. 1st, says that three Washington city notables have in embryo a project to secure from the Post Office Department a contract to carry the mails from all the Northern territories from Bismarck, the terminus of the N. P. R. R., to Helena, Montana, for the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for one year, and adds that the enterprise is so barefaced that even the Post Office Department will probably not give it any encouragement.

A case was decided in the County Court of Chicago, Aug. 8th, involving the validity of common-law marriages. No similar case has ever before been decided in that State. A couple married themselves, lived together for twelve years as husband and wife and had children, when the man died, leaving a large estate. The woman obtained letters of administration, and was in the full enjoyment of the property, when the man's son by a former marriage sought to oust her from the homestead, on the ground that she was not legally his father's widow. The court decided that a common-law marage in Illinois is perfectly valid. The case will be tested in the Supreme Court.
