IN THE BACKWOODS OF BOLIVIA.

An Unexplored Country of Vast Resources Given Up to Savage Tribes.

Its Combine of Known Fora and the Wild Indians of the Baroness—Bolivian Indians and Their Peculiar Arrows—Pictures of the Natives with Camera and Pen—Rail, and Projects for the Opening of the Territory—The Rubber Forests of Tropical Bolivia and How They are Worked—The Quinine Business and How India Has Ruined It for South America.

LA PAZ, BOLIVIA, JULY 16, 1898.—Bolivia is one of the most known countries of the world. Even now the newspapers are carrying about its wars, revolutions and concerning very little else than these upon occasion. The population is here as the civilized population, the greatest of the La Paz Department, Senor Manuel F. Ballivian, the president of the La Paz Department, and one of the most cultured people, and one of the most cultured men of his country. Bolivia has 1,000,000 square miles in area and 1,000,000 people, or one to the square mile