THE INCROYABLE POKE BONNET.

From the Directoire era is borrowed this quaint hat which, for all its odd shape, is becoming to a pretty face. The hat is of white chip and the sharply sloping brim hugs the hair closely all around. Velvet ribbon in a natter blue shade encircles the crown, and just at one side of the front is the piece de resistance of the hat—the costly and beautiful white aigrette, which gives this simple little poke bonnet great elegance. The arrangement of the ribbon in loops is particularly novel and pretty.

BRAIDED NET COAT.

Much braiding on net is used this year with lingerie costumes, and the term "lingerie" is stretched to cover a multitude of fabrics. This is a veritable garden party frock and is intended for wear only in carriages and on piazzas or lawns. Over a whole frock of net with trimmings of tucks and lace frills goes the long coat, also of the net but decorated in panel effect with close soutache braiding. This coat is sleeveless, the net and lace sleeves of the frock showing plainly. These long sleeveless coats are really scarcely more than stoles or tunics covering dressy frocks, and are, of course, no protection from cold, but they are considered particularly smart for ceremonious wear. The parasol is a fringed pongee model in apple green.
