A WORD OF COMFORT.

One of the best and best known citizens of Utah Territory, the bearer of an honored name and himself an honored and honorable man, said to the editor of the NEWS a few days ago: "I feel impressed, and I wish I could similarly impress you, to say to the people who are groaning under the pressure of hard times, who are weighted with obligations, and before whom the future looks dismal and forbidding, that all this is but a temporary trial; it will soon be over, we shall not have to wait long for the opportunity to square ourselves in a business sense, and we will again experience prosperity. Within the last few years opportunities to make money rapidly and in every direction have been presented to us. In many cases we seized them, courageously but calmly, and all was well. In other cases we grasped at them excitedly, threw overboard all judgment, rushed into speculation and extravagance—and now are paying the penalty. We have learned, I believe, a bitter but useful lesson. The Lord does not desire us to be in oppression to the usurer nor entangled in unholy alliances from which we cannot extricate ourselves. I am convinced of His wisdom in permitting adversity to come, and of His infinite mercy in relieving us when His purposes are accomplished. My feeling is that we will be given a better and more complete financial deliverance than we have any human reason to expect; and I hope we will have learned enough to take the counsel of our leaders—help one another, be temperate and moderate, serve the Lord with full purpose of heart, and keep out of debt."

The NEWS has pleasure in giving these views, and it firmly believes them to be true. Already there are signs that the worst has passed, that the depression has touched its lowest mark. But even if these signs are premature or improperly understood—though the plucking process may not yet cease and may even get a little more painful—the better times hoped for are not far distant, and they will dawn when we are prepared for them. Hope, confidence and mutual forbearance will save us from ruin, though failures crash around us on every hand.

THE SALT LAKE VIPER.

On Sunday morning last a venerable and beloved member of this community, one whose long life has been devoted to deeds of kindness and true charity, undertook to pay a visit to a neighboring county to an aged and enfeebled friend, a woman of ninety-three years. For this purpose he had to take the cars at the Great Salt Lake and Hot Springs depot in this city, where he was met by his wife, and a home missionary and his wife, who were going in the same direction to attend Sabbath services. While waiting for the train, the party occupied seats which the manager of the railroad courteously placed for them in the shade. And out of these facts a story utterly false in all its essential features was concocted for and published yesterday morning in a local sheet which has thus given one more proof that it is a disgrace to reputable journalism wherever the term is understood.

When we say that the reverend referred to was President Wilford Woodruff, there rises before the public eye a man who fifty-six years ago accompanied the Pioneer band into this valley and, on the day whose anniversary we shall celebrate as the Twenty-fourth, brought to his carriage their beloved leader and Utah's founder to this spot; a man whose eighty-six years of life have been marked with such conspicuous honesty, simplicity and probity that not even the most vindictive foe could breathe against him a reproach. It is scarcely necessary to say that the paper which yesterday published the condemnable falsehoods about him was the Salt Lake Tribune. The author of them is a shameless, nameless wretch, who glutes on offal and ever and anon for hate or lucre spews it out again over a sensitive planet—and on this occasion even he could not dare to stand patent to his effort.

An outraged public sentiment, a loathing indignation, may be trusted to treat appropriately a wretch who can sink low and a paper that can be so base. The one is the veritable spawn of hell, that pollutes the earth he treads; there is not a beast so hideous that its hide would not be soiled in calling his false and besotted face. The other, in prostituting itself to his calumny, is a stench in the nostrils of all decency.

THE CHAMBER'S SECRETARY.

On Monday Mr. S. W. Sears retired from the responsible and exacting if not very lucrative position of secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of this city, he having previously resigned. It is well assured that in saying that few men in the community could or would have brought to the position the business qualifications, the great experience, the general ability and the willingness to serve that have characterized Mr. Sears's incumbency, we do not voice the sentiment of all who know the man and are familiar with the subject. A great many questions affecting the community at large but more directly the business part of it have arisen at times, and some of these have required deliberation, courage, firmness and tact to successfully cope with. No small part of such contests has fallen to the lot of the secretary, who had to plan and act in the absence of the board and arrange things conveniently and properly against their convening. Mr. Sears has always proven himself equal to these emergencies, and the success with which the Chamber has dealt with important measures was largely the result of his work and methods in every case. His resignation was accepted with regret, and he retires with the respect and esteem of his late associates and of all who know him.

To Mr. Irving A. Benton, late postmaster of this city, and still later U. S. marshal, has been awarded the portfolio of secretary. It is questionable if a better choice could have been made. Certainly some very able and conspicuous gentlemen were candidates against him, but he carried off the prize, such as it is. We shall look for no less a degree of zeal and capability in the present than in the former secretary, and feel assured that we shall not be disappointed. Thorough business ability, tireless energy, and uniform courtesy have characterized Mr. Benton's official life in Salt Lake City, and notably in the trying position of marshal was he able to prove that an efficient law officer may still be a genial gentleman. The Chamber of Commerce is to be congratulated upon securing his services.

THE "MORMON WAY."

A lady and a gentleman of this city, according to a contemporary, think our latest Fourth of July a rather commonplace sort of day, reminding the parties "of the time when the Mormons were in control here." Some people are either poorly informed or altogether ignorant as to the subjects they sometimes speak of and at such times there would show their "wisdom more than" we try to maintain that golden silence which oftener than otherwise is becoming in every one and ought to be an invariable standard of conduct with the majority.

If those who talk so flippantly about what the Mormons did or did not do in the early days here would relieve sitting their groundless prejudices take the trouble to acquaint themselves with the subject, they might spare their better posted friends if not themselves some little humiliation. When the Mormons were in complete control here—because there was nobody else on the ground—there was never a Fourth of July permitted to come without a most hearty, joyous welcome awaiting it. All the flags—the Stars and Stripes we mean—that the community possessed were brought into requisition and made to add to the gladness of the occasion. Preparations began weeks ahead and there was always a successful parade as the result of frequent rehearsals in which all enthusiastically took part and did not mind the time and trouble they were put to. The new clothes—very few people had more than one extra suit and very many not so much—were brushed up, mended where needed and everything held in readiness for the great day. And scarcely had the preceding hour of midnight passed before the small hops and those who were older and had joined the ranks of "Young America" broke loose from restraint and made the remainder of the night as hideous as the occasion of their disposal would permit. Promptly at daybreak and again at custom season and words would hum and at intervals during the day throughout the Territory at favorable points of observation patriotism would send the star-spangled. The procession, which formed at the Office and continued to the quiet and healthful shade, would then debouch into a grove or other appropriate resort, and the Declaration was read, the oration delivered, and a social repast was partaken of, accompanied by toasts, speeches, music and dancing. Then the people would return to their homes in the cool of the evening, tired but happy, and with a feeling that they had spent a day well worth the time and trouble they had taken to prepare for another same around.

This program or something similar was the almost unvarying rule with the Mormons for the first twenty years after the settlement of Utah. And the heartiness, the spontaneity, the whole-souled manner with which everything was done were never excelled anywhere. Everybody seemed to regard it as a pleasurable duty to contribute all in his power to the general success and enjoyment, and because a person could not have as conspicuous a position as any other kind could not purchase dress as well as most of the rest made no perceptible difference. There was no holding back. This was the "Mormon way" so sneringly spoken of and it was the right way; it inculcated more of patriotism, regard for our national system and desire to room up among the grand Americans whose records are lessons to the young than they have learned in all the subsequent time. As later years came on and business affairs became more and more interwoven with our daily lives, there was gradually less time and less inclination to go to the expense and trouble of getting up general celebrations. The spirit came not from our side but has naturally been partaken of to some extent; and at last it seems out of the question to give the day of days any more recognition than such as is contributed by individuals in an unorganized way. In no public place near here was there yesterday a patriotic address showing the progress of our country and the growing stability of its institutions delivered, that the youth of all ages and those older might realize if even for a moment how much greater than a king is the heir to such a legacy as the Revolutionary patriots bequeathed to us; in no such place if at all was the Declaration, which never can grow old and which to a patriotic heart cannot become tiresome by repetition, read; and there was no music except such as was hired for advertising purposes. The last Fourth does not even remotely compare with the first, but the "Mormon way" is in no sense to blame for the falling off.

HANDCART MISSIONARIES.

To the following letter, which explains itself, a place is willingly given:

Editor Deseret News—Since the publication in the DESERET NEWS of the handcart missionaries' experience while crossing the plains, thirteen years ago, I am assisted by several the survivors of the Chosen Hall of St. George, that I omitted two names in my list, who were also members of the company. I would regret this omission and therefore forward them to you, if you will kindly give place to them in your paper viz. John Spine and Robert Milne, the former from Bay Tree, the latter from Paraweah.

Yours truly,
GEORGE GODDARD.

HOW THE WORLD STANDS.

A friend hands us a tabulated statement of the debts of the world by nations with request that we publish the same. As it is interesting to many and may be of use to some, we cheerfully comply. The table is not lengthy but pointerous, as follows:

Austria-Hungary	$ 2,001,000,000
Belgium	312,000,000
Denmark	38,400,000
France	4,000,000,000
Germany (entire)	2,000,000,000
England and dependencies	3,000,000,000
Greece	15,000,000
Italy	2,200,000,000
Montenegro	1,000,000
Netherlands	33,000,000
Portugal	100,000,000
Roumania	170,000,000
Russia (at)	4,000,000,000
Servia	30,000,000
Spain	1,100,000,000
Sweden	30,000,000
Norway	20,000,000
Switzerland	40,000,000
Turkey	600,000,000
Argentine	150,000,000
Bolivia	15,000,000
Brazil	600,000,000
Canada	270,000,000
Chili	35,000,000
Colombia	15,000,000
Mexico	110,000,000
Peru	120,000,000
United States	1,500,000,000
Uruguay	75,000,000
Venezuela	35,000,000
Egypt	700,000,000
Another empire (about)	1,000,000,000

These figures are consequential, but the entire consequence does not appear at a glance. It should be remembered that of the grand total of $31,100,000,000 of debts the house of the Rothschilds of Germany and the bank of England own $28,000,000,000; and that every cent of it is payable, principal and interest, in gold. In addition to this, let us remember that in all the world is but $3,700,000,000 of gold and that the London and Frankfort-on-the-Main concerns control new $3,000,000,000 of it. The people of the world have but barely enough gold to pay the interest on their debts, leaving the bulk of the world's only money, and practically all of it, in the hands of these two. Does it not, in the light of all this, sound like the chatter of a demented person to talk about the United states, which can produce enough silver money to conduct its transactions with, maintaining a gold basis?

STILL IMPROVING.

Just as we had almost settled down to the conclusion that naval architecture of war vessels had reached a point beyond which there was no improvement, comes the Victoria disaster and sets the world to thinking and planning. That vessel was a magnificent piece of workmanship, one in which it was thought no feature of protection or armament was wanting—heavily armored, powerfully equipped and splendidly manned, and yet in a moment's unmooring it is adding more than experimental direction, she is down by the bow with water and goes down in thirty fathoms with nearly all on board in a few minutes.

It seems that everything animate or mechanical has its vulnerable points, though in many cases, as in the one spoken of, these are not known and are only developed by accident. If all other war craft are like the Victoria, capable of resisting a twelve-inch shot if fired from a distance of more than a mile or so, and yet not able to resist the battlement of a ram even though coming slowly, the thing to do is to dry-dock them all and extend the armor entirely around the hull; as it is now, it seems that a shot "between wind and water" would cripple if not entirely control any of them. When that is provided against in the course of events another will go down from some other cause and that will have to be lashed out to, and so on. The best plan is to take off the armor and run down the guns into articles of use and ornament, and when nations are at loggerheads let them get together peacefully and invoke the aid of neutral powers if alone they cannot agree, arranging every detail of the controversy by the arbitrament which comes of Christianized civilization and upon which the glow of the rising sun of the twentieth century is falling and becoming brighter and more beneficent every day. That is what the United States and England are doing and their example must become the criterion, the German emperor to the contrary notwithstanding.
