WICKED ADVERTISEMENTS.

There are demons walking up and down in the earth, whose especial object is to destroy chastity. Some of them, at least, are provided with bodies in the ordinary human form, but they represent a horribly degraded type of the race. A favorite method for accomplishing their diabolical designs is to publish alluring advertisements in such journals as will sell space for the purpose. Incredible as it may seem, there are journals that lay claim to decency and to a character that justifies their admission into the homes of decent people, which, for a few cents, will risk becoming accessory to the ruin of any number of pure young persons by publishing such advertisements.

The procurer or the lecherous villain who is seeking fresh victims, will say in an advertisement that "a gentleman of means desires to meet an attractive young lady," or will use words of similar import. Some giddy girl who has not been properly instructed or disciplined, or who perhaps has no thought of anything more than a little fun, answers the advertisement. She thus places herself to a greater or less extent under the infernal spell of the wretch who is seeking her destruction. If she carries her folly far enough to consent to an interview, she throws herself into the maelstrom and the chances are against her ever again returning stainless to the walks of innocence. An advertisement printed in a paper which is read in her home has been the means of destroying her, body and soul; and the suffering involved in such a ruin has never been told by human tongue. It is one of the anomalies of journalism that a paper will publish an advertisement of this character and then enliven its news columns with a description of the results that have flowed from it, coupled with moralizing remarks upon such advertisements and what they lead to.

Our age is pre-eminently characterized by sexual corruption and by a multiplicity of agencies that tend to spread it. Next to the wish that all men and women were pure, comes the wish that all would aid in checking impurity. But when journals of large and general circulation, in consideration of a dime or two, will consent to make their columns one of the most effective of all known means for spreading sin, shame and ruin, hope in human nature sinks and the pessimist finds ample argument.

The moral to which all this points is two-fold: Let parents discriminate as to the character of the literature they admit into their homes; and let them train their sons and daughters, the latter especially, to shun as they would a serpent, every hint, invitation or suggestion of the illegitimate purpose of which there can be any doubt.

SCHOOL ELECTION.

It may be deemed untimely to tell the people of this city, who are still panting with the exhaustion produced by the great political struggle they have just passed through, that they have another election on the tapis to which they should commence to devote some attention right away. But duty requires us to bring the fact to popular remembrance. On Wednesday, December 5th, an election must be held for choosing a member of the school board of this city from each municipal ward. The members whose terms expire are as follows: First municipal ward, A. J. Pendleton Jr.; second, William Nelson; third, W. J. Beattie; fourth, R. W. Young; fifth, J. E. Daly. It will be remembered that a municipal ward and a precinct are geographically the same thing.

Scarcely a word of criticism is ever heard regarding the administration of the school board. The management of the school affairs of the city, at least so far as the general public are informed, seems to have been characterized by excellent executive and business ability, and a patriotic and disinterested desire to accomplish the greatest amount of good for the greatest number. This fact is patent, and it tells a good story. This city has a public school system not excelled by that of any other city on the continent, of similar size.

Beyond all question, a leading cause which has contributed to the excellence of the work of the school board, has been the non-partisan character, politically and religiously, of its personnel. The splendid results that have followed the exclusion from that body of public servants of all political and religious issues, leave the voters of the city with only one consistent course to pursue in future, which is to perpetuate that exclusion. A change in the policy now prevailing which would make it possible for partisanism, either political or religious, to enter the school board, would be a deplorable retrogression. A partisan school board means that the positions held by the superintendent, the principals, and even the teachers would be made the football of party success at the polls. Even the janitors would hold their tenures subject to the mutations of municipal politics.

This would degrade the schools to the level of a political machine. Employment in them would be contingent on the votes an applicant could command. The positions of teachers would be filled by the favorites of men in power, and the baneful and detestable results of such a system would show itself in the preference displayed by the teacher for the children of parents of the prevailing political faith. May the day never come that will bring such evils upon the magnificent public school system of our mountain metropolis!

But there is, in our view, no danger of such a change being seriously proposed, much less effected, as will admit partisanism into the school board. The man who would suggest such a thing would be hooted down; at least he ought to be. Heretofore in most instances some patriotic citizen of the municipal ward has prepared a call for a primary, and has circulated it for the signatures of prominent men of both parties. The primary thus called has nominated a candidate, without regard to his politics or religion, who has been chosen solely with a view to his fitness for the office. We recommend that this be done in each municipal ward this time.

It is not the purpose of this paper to advocate the election of any particular candidate. The position is almost destitute of pecuniary emoluments, while it involves much labor and responsibility. Of the gentlemen whose terms are expiring, it is but just to say that they share the credit for the excellent record made by the board as a whole. Whether any or all of them shall be returned is a matter of indifference to us, so long as the board shall continue non-partisan, and be made up of men suited for the position.

ANOTHER POWDERLY FALLACY.

Nothing could more clearly illustrate the retrogression of ex-Master Workman Powderly than an appeal he made to the workingmen of Pennsylvania to vote against the Democratic candidate for governor in the late election, for the reason that he (Editor Singerly) "makes use of a wealth-saving machine to drive self-respecting workmen into the street." Powderly referred to the type-setting machine, which has been adopted for use in the Philadelphia Record composing room, as it has in nearly all the large newspaper offices of the country. The same argument would demand the abolition of mowing machines in favor of the scythe, the harvester to make room for the sickle, and even the sewing-machine because it does the work of the needle-woman. With slight variation the same logic would also be made to require the smashing of every empty bottle, so that somebody would have more employment in making new ones, and the daily destruction of furniture, clothes and homes in order to make work plentiful. This would be socialism and idiocy of the most astonishing sort, but it would follow as a legitimate result the acceptance of such views as Powderly espouses.

Organized labor, however, has gone far beyond the danger of infection with such sentiments as those with which the ex-master workman of the Knights of Labor stultifies himself. Everywhere the leading unions and sensible representatives of unorganized labor have come to accept labor-saving machinery not only as inevitable but as a necessary adjunct of human progress. Of course the introduction of such devices and inventions sometimes causes the displacement of labor, and in the outset leads to the apparent injury of a few. But the benefits to the many are almost immediately seen and felt, and it is not long until the advantages and the gain are made manifest to one and all. Mr. Powderly seems to be becoming more and more of a back number.

"GREATER NEW YORK."

When all the suburbs and surroundings of New York, consolidated in the "Greater New York" scheme, are properly annexed, that city will be one of the greatest in the world both in size and population, second only to London. It will include within its limits over three hundred square miles with a population of about 3,000,000 inhabitants.

The fact that Chicago for years has been increasing faster than New York, endangering the position of the latter city as the greatest commercial center of the United States, is of course the chief factor in the movement for annexation. But it is claimed that this is not entirely a matter of sentiment. The New Yorkers do not struggle for primacy only for the satisfaction of local pride; the prosperity of the city is held to depend on it. If a great metropolis is allowed to sink to a second rank in point of population, business will be diverted from it in proportion, as this naturally gravitates towards the centers of population. The vote cast for the extension of the city's limits shows that the citizens appreciate this fact and are determined to make an effort to hold their own.

New York was once a big fort at the southern extremity of Manhattan island. The growth of the city to gigantic proportions dates from the construction of the Erie canal. Then came the building of railroads. The West and South received most of their emigrants and foreign merchandise through New York. On account of her capacious harbor and the numerous lines connecting it with all parts of the great Republic, the city achieved the importance it now has and is destined to have for a long time to come.

The present area of New York is thirty-nine square miles, while Chicago has 180 and Philadelphia 130. With the first mentioned city at once extended to 317 square miles, the rival cities will be left a long way behind. New York will soon have all the benefit of an immense population. With a purified municipal government, the prosperity of "greater New York" should be everything that can be desired.

In one of his speeches in New York "General" Booth, the venerable founder of the Salvation Army, speaking of his plans as embodied in his book "In Darkest England and the Way Out," said among other things:

America may be free and enlightened, and all that, and England may be in darkness and gloom; but I tell you that when your country has smoked as long as your old John Bull's it will be every bit as full of soot, if not fuller."

That was when he first arrived in this country. The "general" may by this time have studied our institutions a little closer and found that Americans have a way of sweeping their chimney when needed so as not to let the soot accumulate too long. That makes a great difference.

"A SUBSCRIBER," who writes from Parowan, is respectfully informed that in all well-regulated newspaper offices, anonymous communications go straight to the waste basket. This is not saying that all such communications are unworthy; it is the only way an editor has—in case he is being criticized—of rebuking those who are ready enough to find fault with him but are not brave enough to let him know who they are.

THE ESTEEMED Co. Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal ought to be able to make a few remarks that would be both interesting and picturesque just about this time.

ONE BRIGHT streak of sunshine comes even to the Democrats through the dark clouds that encompass them: Governor Waite of Colorado is checked in his sanguinary career.

WITH both House and Senate Republican, it will be a hard, cold winter that shall begrudge the President as much solitary fishing and duck-shooting as he can possibly yearn for.

THE QUESTION before the house is upon the motion to make it unanimous.

NOW THEN, Governor, what's the matter with the Thanksgiving proclamation?

Real Political Issues

WHILE TRYING TO SOLVE THEM PERSONAL BUSINESS SHOULD ALSO BE REMEMBERED, LIKE JUDGE COLBORN AND POPPERTON PLACE "ALL LE SAME."

In these days of political strife people are apt to become so wrapped up in discussing the merits of their respective parties and their respective candidates, that they forget business, home and family. Thomas K. Beecher once said in a sermon, "that some men so loved their country that they forgot their Christ, and some so loved their party they forgot their country;" and the truth of the assertion is very apparent in this city at the present time, and a word of caution may not come amiss, and all those who prefer to back their opinions by a bet, than by an argument, should remember the advice of the gambler to his friend: "never make a bet he could not afford to lose," which if properly heeded would make election bets very few this fall. But if you must bet, bet some useful article and not cash, that the winner is in duty bound to [illegible] and be none the better off for having won. We would suggest a Suit of Clothes or an Overcoat (and we are not averse to becoming stakeholders.) The winner would be made joyous and comfortable, make a respectable appearance when making application for a job in the gift of his favorite candidate, and the loser would not be likely to be paying his wager at the very lowest prices for which we are making handsome clothing this fall, and the winner can [illegible] satisfy himself from our immense stock—nearly five hundred styles of cloth to select from.
