LIFE FOR LIFE.

The Murderer of Harrison Listens to His Death Sentence.

AN ASSASSIN, BUT A COWARD.

Prendergast Placed in the Murderers' Row of Cells.—He Declines to Be Interviewed.

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—Prendergast, the murderer of Carter H. Harrison, will be hanged for his crime. Ably defended as the assassin was, and strong as the evidence adduced to save his neck has been, the jury found him to be sufficiently sane to be responsible for the act, and demanded that he pay the highest penalty for the offense against the law. This, however, is a sorry recompense for the death of Carter H. Harrison.

Nothing since the commission of his crime has so irritated Prendergast as a comparison between himself and Guiteau, but in the courtroom this afternoon he showed that one trait existed in common between them. He proved himself as cowardly, as miserable a coward. When Clerk Fitzgerald arose to read the finding of the jury, the prisoner [illegible] the back of his chair, his face flushed and his knees trembling.

"We the jury find the defendant, Patrick Eugene John Prendergast, guilty of murder in the manner and form as charged in the indictment, and fix the penalty at death," read Fitzgerald. Prendergast's face turned pale, he opened his mouth to speak, but only a faint murmur came. He moved slightly and would have fallen but for the assistance of a bailiff. He was half led, half carried back to his cell, where, refusing to speak, he threw himself upon his bunk in an attempt to hide from his fellow prisoners, whose expressions of satisfaction over the verdict were more emphatic than graceful, and more sincere than polite.

THE CHARGE TO THE JURY.

At one o'clock the judge began to charge the jury. Prendergast buried his face in a black handkerchief and did not look up till at the close of the judge's charge the word "death" was uttered and the prisoner looked up for an instant. Upon the question of insanity, which was the main point in issue, the judge said if the jury believed the defendant committed the crime as charged, knowing it wrong, it was the duty of the jury to find the prisoner guilty, even though they believed at the time the crime was committed the prisoner was not perfectly sane, but if the jury believed at the time the crime was committed the prisoner was not of sound mind, but affected with insanity, and such affection was the efficient cause of the act, then the prisoner ought to be acquitted. If the jury had any doubt as to the prisoner's sanity, the law gave him the benefit of the doubt. If the jury believed the defendant was laboring under a delusion which deprived the accused of the power of choosing between right and wrong, then the jury must acquit him.

At 1:30 the jury retired to consider the verdict. Nothing was heard of them for exactly an hour. Then Bailiff Rowe hurried through the room to notify the jailer to bring the prisoner into court, and a few minutes later the jury filed in and took their places.

When Fitzgerald read in measured tones the finding of the jury the prisoner had focused upon him the eyes of nearly every person in the room, and with difficulty he kept from breaking down.

Attorney Wade made the usual request that the jury be polled, and then the prisoner was removed and the judge announced the jury excused and the proceedings at an end. Before the adjournment of court Wade made the usual application for a new trial, and the judge announced that he would hear the motion at a future date.

HIS MOTHER.

The mother of the prisoner did not trust herself to remain in court to hear the result of the trial, but lingered around the court, waiting for the first news to come from the court room. When it came, an instant after the verdict was rendered, she tottered away clinging to the banister for support as she descended the stairs. John Prendergast, the prisoner's brother, was in court, but without attracting attention.

In an interview tonight Attorney Trude said: "The conviction of this man will, in my opinion, operate as a deterrent against the commission of like crimes by notoriety-loving cranks. Since the trial of Prendergast has been in progress cranks have arisen all over the country, threatening mayors, chiefs of departments and men of means. This verdict will operate as a life insurance policy on their safety. A verdict of acquittal on the ground of insanity would have been sowing of dragon's teeth, and the threatened mayors and others would be in danger of losing their lives."

THE ASSASSIN.

"Please ask the gentlemen to excuse me. I would prefer not to see or talk with anybody tonight."

This was the verbal response of Prendergast as he sat in his cell tonight to a written message to the effect that the Associated Press would be pleased to receive any statement he might be disposed to make. The reporter who went in the message followed Night Jailer Fahy into the cage and heard the reply as above, spoken in a clear, calm tone, very much as any man might decline to be interviewed.

Prendergast, when removed from the court room was placed in cell No. 11, facing the women's cage. Just inside the cell he sat, while outside was posted the death watch. If the prisoner had any conception of the real significance of this extra watch, he gave no sign. He appeared perfectly at ease, with not a trace of excitement, distress or anxiety upon his forbidding features, having had five hours to regain his composure since the verdict was rendered. A few minutes after he was placed in the cell his brother John was admitted. The brothers grasped hands, but neither spoke for a time. Then John said: "Don't lose hope, Gene; we will do all we can for you." Later the assassin's lawyers called and said that they would be there to cheer him up.

Tomorrow Prendergast will be given a cell in the murderers' row, and will have for his nearest neighbors Painter and Higgins, the two men under death sentence for murder.

RESTRAINING ORDERS.

But the Officers say They Will Do Their Duty.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Dec. 29.—Grand Master Sargent and Grand Secretary Arnold, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, were today served with a restraining order of the United States court in regard to the Northern Pacific. The order restrains the grand officers from ordering, aiding or encouraging a strike or [illegible] communicating with the men of that system by any method. Sargent states, however, the order will not affect him in the least. He says: "It will not allow such an order to interfere with my duties. Should I be called to St. Paul tomorrow, I would go. The men have not yet received a definite answer from the receivers. If the answer is not satisfactory, the matter will be appealed to the courts. If the receivers are sustained by the court, the men will then be allowed to use their own judgment about continuing in the service of the company. No law on earth will compel a man to work in the absence of a contract, unless he is a vagrant."

To Search for Colgate.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 29.—General Carlin, who is in this city, takes no stock in the story from Spokane to the effect that a bottle was found in the Clearwater river, containing a letter signed by George Colgate, the man whom the Carlin party left behind to die, saying he was alive and begging for help to [illegible] him. The letter was dated November 27th. General Carlin is certain that Colgate was dead ten days previous to that time. He thinks the letter was written and placed in the bottle for the purpose of wringing money from him.

TO THE RESCUE.

KENDRICK, Idaho, Dec. 29.—A party of three men with pack animals left today for the headwaters of the Clearwater to search for George Colgate, the cook for the Carlin party. Colgate was left in the mountains, being unable to walk, and it was thought he must certainly perish, but a bottle was picked up in the river Peneways, sixty miles from Lewiston, which indicates that Colgate is among the living. The bottle contained a note purporting to be from Colgate, in which he says he is fifty miles from civilization, but his legs are better and he can walk. He [illegible] the finder of the note to come to his relief.

Witnesses in the Coughlin Case.

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—It is rumored today that Alexander Sullivan will go on the stand as a witness for the defense, and Judge Grinnell is mentioned as a possible witness for the prosecution. Cronin's friends produced a cablegram today, alleged to have been sent from Paris, and [illegible] from Chicago by Alexander Sullivan to Patrick Egan in Lincoln, Neb., which they think relate to the disappearance of Dr. Cronin.

The Coffin Empty.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 29.—This morning while laborers were exhuming the bodies of deceased state convicts, to remove them to the new prison cemetery, they found the coffin of Jim Burrows, the train robber, buried two years ago, empty. The discovery caused a sensation, and led to rumors that the bandit may have escaped.

THE SITUATION IN BRAZIL.

Latest Advices from Rio Janeiro to the London "Times."

The Position of the Insurgents Critical.—The Government Waiting for New Ships.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Times tomorrow will publish the following dispatch from Rio, December 22nd, via Montevideo, 28th: During the past week the custom house has been closed on account of firing from Cobras island. The government forts continue pounding Fort Villegaignon.

The rumor of a naval fight near Desterro is not true. The Tiradentes and the Bahia are now at Montevideo. The Aquidaban and the Republica are at Desterro.

Gama has withdrawn his forces from Governor's island. He states that the number of men he can dispose of is not sufficient to occupy such a large island, and he prefers to concentrate his forces on board the ships. From Forts Cobras and Villegaignon the insurgents continue firing upon the shore front, rendering communication between the merchant shipping and shore dangerous.

Gama's forces number 1,200, and he proposes keeping the government in check by harassing the troops until the arrival of the insurgents from the south, and then attacking northward. If Gama is able to hold out until the arrival of insurgent reinforcements he will probably meet with success. I consider the present position of the insurgents at Rio extremely critical. Without aid Gama cannot hold out.

The government will await the arrival of the new ships and then attack in force, opening fire from all the shore artillery and using every effort to crush Gama. The result of the revolution greatly depends upon the advance of the insurgents during the next few days.

Advices from the south state that the insurgent General Saraiva has [illegible] 2,000 men under General Lima on the frontier of Parana, and is now pursuing them. Letters received from Rio Grande do Sul December 13th say 1,000 soldiers in that city and the insurgents were in close proximity. Advices from Desterro say the insurgent army numbers 14,000, but are in need of ammunition. The government has recaptured Mucangue island after a sharp skirmish.

THE POPE AND CZAR.

The Latter Afraid of Being Publicly Exposed.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—A special to the Herald from Rome: A high personage of the Vatican, in an interview today said: "The relations between the pope and the czar are at this moment very strained. In July last the pope wrote an autograph letter, in which he complained of the persecutions against the Roman Catholics in Poland. It was written in a mild way. Leo XIII declared to the czar that if the persecutions did not cease he would be compelled to protest publicly in the face of Europe against the intolerance of the czar. The czar became frightened and has just sent to Rome the Catholic bishop of Tiraspol, [illegible] of St. Petersburg, to [illegible] the pope and [illegible]."

EDMUND WEBB, KAYSVILLE, UTAH.

"I am [illegible] years old and have lived in Utah for [illegible] forty years. Continuing he said:

"I suffered with headaches, ringing in the ears, my eyes were watery, my nose stopped up, [illegible] filled with mucus [illegible] so that I could scarcely speak. Such was my symptoms until about two years ago, when my hearing became affected, my stomach began to [illegible] indigestion, my appetite was good enough, [illegible] I was not satisfied by eating enough for [illegible], and after eating the food lay like lead in my stomach.

"My sleep was fitful and broken, and I felt tired all the time. I tried many different kinds of catarrh remedies, but none of them done me any good, except a slight temporary relief. I read of the success of the Zion Medical Institute in treating such cases as mine, and placed myself under treatment and have continued with the treatment of Drs. Shores & Shores of the Zion Medical and Surgical Institute, until now I can safely say I am a different man altogether from what I was when I began treatment. I have improved from the start and now I can sleep well, except my hearing, and it is improving as rapidly as possible taking into consideration my age. The doctors assure me that my hearing will be restored completely in a short time, and I feel very grateful for what they have done for me.

"I recommend these physicians to all and will be glad to have any one doubting this statement to call or write me at my home, Kaysville, Utah."
