ONLY A FEW OF THEM.

A Heartless and Discouraged Remnant of Liberals

Discuss the Question of Delegate Rawlins's Resignation This Afternoon

That was a woe begone and disconsolate little remnant of a scattered and fast dying band that assembled at the Knutsford hotel this afternoon in response to a call issued by Grand Sachem Powers and Statistician and Lawyer Allen for the members of the Liberal Territorial committee and such other Liberals as wished to attend a meeting, the purpose of which has never been officially announced, but which has been told and retold in "confidence" until it has become an open secret.

Two o'clock was the time set for the meeting, but at that hour there was no sign of the presence of the great chief. Two-thirty came, still he was absent. In the meantime Morris Somers, he who aspired to the secretaryship of the American legation at Berlin, but who was turned down on account of being a Tuscarora, Charlie Stanton, Sam Galieser, the money making canine tax collector, Fire Chief Stanton, Hank Barnes, ex-Coroner Harris, Colonel Nelson, Joe Morris, Lochrie, "J. P.," Mayor Lundy of Ogden, Councilman Beardsley, Superintendent of Waterworks Ryan, Pat Moran, Jake Greenwald, Judge Goodwin and a few others.

At three o'clock Judge Powers sauntered in and called the meeting to order and the roll called showed the following members present: Powers, Knox, Townsend, Lundy, Haynes.

Judge Powers said it was an indisputable fact that the Delegate of this Territory had resigned his office and that under the law the Governor must call a special election within twenty days.

For my own part I know that his resignation cannot be withdrawn, and that no juggling of the politicians can continue him in the office he once held. Taking that view of the matter—and I know that I am right—I wish to know if you want to put a Liberal candidate in the field and I submit to you the fact that early in June a special committee of prominent senators will be in the Territory to inquire whether this Territory, New Mexico and Oklahoma are ready for statehood. As to this also I would like advice whether you want a representation before that committee.

Colonel Kaighn moved that it be the sense of the meeting that a candidate be put in the field.

This precipitated a hot discussion and Morris Somers said he knew beyond a question of doubt that Governor West had Rawlins's resignation in his pocket.

Judge Goodwin said he did not believe Rawlins had resigned at all and that the whole thing was a farce from beginning to end.

Serious Accident.

On Thursday evening Walter East, a six-year old boy who lives with his parents, was run over by one of Watson Bros' drays driven, it is said, by a man named Burt. The unfortunate little fellow climbed on the conveyance with several other children and was pushed off by one of them. He fell between the wheels and one of them passed over his body, badly bruising and cutting his left hand, leg and breast.

It is impossible to tell the extent of his injuries or to predict the result of them at present, but recovery is sincerely hoped for by his grief stricken parents.

The Temperance Orator.

Hon. J. T. Woolley arrived via the R. G. Western this morning, and while here will be the guest of Mrs. E. Griffiths of Darlington Place. He lectures in the Tabernacle tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock.

MUSEUM OF ANTIQUITIES.

Cliff Dwellers' Relics to be Preserved at Durango.

The people of Durango, Colorado, have taken a step that might prove an example to public spirited citizens here. They have become interested in the collection of cliff-dwelling relics and as a result of their enthusiasm have organized a society to be known as the Durango Archaeological and Historical society. The directors for the first year are: H. Garnsulli, Clayton Grinnell, Charles McLoyd, Daniel W. Ayres, F. S. Balster, Richard McCloud, Mrs. Pearle, S. Horowitz, Mrs. Dr. Rose Cid Beere and Mrs. Jeanette T. Riter. Articles of incorporation were filed Thursday in the office of the secretary of state. It is the intention of the society to not only collect from the Aztec country such relics as denote the existence of a forgotten race, but to gather such information on the subject as will enable them to publish what is known or has been learned of this ancient people. The relics collected will be stored in a museum at Durango and it will certainly be one of the most interesting collections in America.

QUARTER OF A MILLION.

The Property Turned Over to the Investment Company To-day.

To-day there was conveyed to the Syndicate Investment Co., whose articles of incorporation are noted elsewhere in the NEWS, real estate in this city of the aggregate value of $254,000. The grantors are W. H. Dickson, Annie L. Dickson, Robert C. Chambers, Eudora T. Chambers, Richard Mackintosh, Emma T. Mackintosh, John J. Daly, Eliza M. Daly, John E. Dooly, Eleanor M. Dooly, John E. Dooly as trustee for George M. Scott and James Glendinning, George M. Scott, James Glendinning, Margaret Glendinning, Nicholas Treweek, Margarette Treweek, Lewis P. Kelsey, Parley L. Williams, Kate Sharp Williams, James K. Gillespie, Kate R. Gillespie, Harry C. Hill, Wm. S. McCornick, Hannah McCornick, Samuel H. Auerbach, Eveline B. Auerbach, Frederick H. Auerbach, Orlando W. Powers, Anna W. Powers, Patrick H. Lannan, Wm. Burke and Mary L. Burke. The property conveyed consists of parts of lot 1 and 5, block 59, part of lot 4, block 59, part of lot 5, block 51, and part of lot 5, block 69, in plat A, Salt Lake City. These tracts of land are situated on the lot on which the postoffice is located and the one immediately west, facing on Second South street, also just north of the Metropolitan hotel, the corner opposite west of the hotel, and part of the old Hoagland property on First West street, just south of the corner of Second South. The consideration which the parties receive is stock in the Syndicate Investment company.

"THE PLAYERS."

When Millicent Dwight packed her three gowns, her notice book, her character photographs and her letter of introduction in the attic room of a New York boarding house her joy was unconfined. The boarding house was east of Third avenue, and the attic room was four flights from the street; but when one is talented and 20, and visits New York for the first time with a flattering introduction to an influential manager, one does not count stairs.

On the first evening Millicent ate her gristly roast and wilted salad with the air of a young woman who is assured of champagne and sweetbreads at the week's end and wondered whether it would be three days or five before she "signed" with the influential manager and engaged quarters better befitting the consideration of a metropolitan company.

Two weeks later Millicent occupied the same attic room on the east side, but boarded cheaply at a Third avenue eating house, where she could breakfast heartily for 15 cents and dine luxuriously for 20.

One week more and Millicent was boiling her breakfast cocoa over the gas jet and washing her handkerchiefs in the bathtub and flattening them on the window pane to dry. In those days she blacked her boots with ink and stuffed her mirror frame with newspaper advertisements for ballet girls and lady fencers. The letter of recommendation which the influential manager had kindly returned was streaked and worn by constant handling, and the notice book was dog eared.

On one end of her bureau was a box of letters from the man who wished to marry her. At first Millicent used to read and sigh over these pledges of affection. It was such a pity, she thought, that he cared like that for a girl who never could marry him. Now she read and sighed over them with a different emotion. "It can't come to that," she would say.

* * * * * *

At the start there had been a certain piquancy in the venture. To be talented and 20 and to seek her fortune alone in a great city read uncommonly like the first chapter of a romance. Besides New York captivated the girl. Her rounds of the day finished, she would ride from the Battery to Harlem on the elevated, price diamond necklaces and air her three gowns with the best of them on that Broadway promenade whose glitter was constantly suggestive of footlights and an orchestral accompaniment.

The agencies charmed by their absolute novelty.

To penetrate to that private territory, to see a slip bearing her name and address placed in a pigeonhole labeled "Soubrettes and Ingenues," seemed to Millicent a unique and exciting experience, one well worth hours of waiting and the comments, sarcastic or indifferent, of the manager and his satellites.

All this, however, as I said, was at the start.

To be the heroine of a romance is one thing, the heroine of a realistic novel quite another.

"I'm beginning to suspect the truth of all these horrid stories of baffled genius struggling against adverse fate," she wrote near the close of the third week to the man who wished to marry her.

Managers all seemed in league against her—all save one, who, from the beginning, had treated her with unaccountable forbearance. He had even sent her tickets for a new play. There was a soubrette part in it that was badly done, he said. The author was a friend of his and—well, he couldn't promise anything, but he'd like her to see the part.

The soubrette was bad—worse even than Millicent had hoped; weak, common, self conscious.

"If such people can obtain engagements, then why not I?" she said the next morning in reporting the play. "I'm not a raw amateur; I studied for two years with a well known actor and stage manager. I've played over and over again at student's matinees and later in professional performances in small towns. It's only a chance I want, a chance to speak a dozen lines, that's all, but they won't give me even a hearing."

Millicent's cheek burned. She shook the brown locks from her moist forehead and eyed the agent aggressively.

He shook his head depreciatingly. He was slim and blond and boyish, with a droll, captivating accent that heightened the effect of his dry utterances.

"I'll tell you what it is," the man said. "I'll see Boyle at luncheon today and put your case to him. If he reports favorably, I'll let you know this afternoon. Don't hope too much though. If you don't hear from me by 5 at the latest, you'll know there's nothing to expect from that quarter."

Millicent grasped his hand in parting almost affectionately.

"It's a chance," she whispered as she climbed the stairs at the east side boarding house. "If I get it, why, I'm bound to succeed. If I lose it"— The girl's heart sank.

Go home? The worn face of her father, the shabby gowns and meager faces of her mother and little sisters, were a constant reproach of her idleness. Work? A year's devotion to literature had barely supplied her with pocket handkerchiefs. Clerk? Her handwriting was bad, her accounts inaccurate. Nun lights —or suicide—or matrimony! These were the only alternatives.

At 4 the maid brought a card to the door. "John Walker," Millicent read incredulously.

In the parlor below a tall figure rose to meet her.

"Look here, Milly," the man said decisively. "I've come to take you back with me tonight. You might as well marry me now as any time. You'll only waste time fooling round here."

Milly regarded the speaker logged [illegible]. It was as though the walls of the house were closing in upon her.

"I can't, John," she protested, "I—I never promised, and you have no license."

"But there's no need of a license here," he returned, ignoring the other clause of the girl's objection. "There's an old friend of mine, a Methodist minister, only a block away, who's all ready. Why, Milly, it's the easiest thing in the world if only you make up your mind to it. We'll get supper at the Metropole and take the next train back to Boston. I must be at the office tomorrow."

Millicent shook her head.

"I can't decide all at once, John," she entreated. "I must have time to think."

She glanced at the black marble clock on the mantel. Half past 4. In half an hour her future would be decided for her. It was almost a relief to shift the responsibility from her own shoulders.

The man consented grudgingly. "Remember," he said gravely, watching her brown, piquant profile outlined against the white window curtain, "remember, if you marry me you must give up all those notions about acting. I won't have my wife set up for everybody to stare at." His words were harsh, but his eyes were affectionate.

Millicent nodded. "I understand," she returned. "If I give up now, it will be for always."

"I'll put on my hat," she added. "We might as well go now and have it over."

"I couldn't help myself," she thought wearily as she followed him into the street. "They wouldn't give me a chance; there was no way but this."

When she returned, there was a plain gold ring upon her left hand.

Millicent eyed it incredulously all the time she was packing her trunk. The notice books, the character photographs, the list of agencies and the letter of introduction she laid in the wastebasket. As she crossed to the door her dress brushed a yellow envelope from the table:

In a blue [illegible]—I showed Boyle at luncheon, but warned him at the hotel this afternoon and extracted his promise to give you a trial. With best wishes, [illegible]. Lucky, wasn't it, that the chance came before you left New York? Sincerely,

EDWARD BOWMAN.

At the foot of the stairs John Walker drew his wife's arm affectionately within his own. "What's the matter, Millicent?" he said gravely, "you look as though you'd seen a ghost."

"Only the ghost of a comedy actress that never was to be," said Millicent steadily. "You must be hungry, John. Will there be time to have a steak cooked for our supper?"—Margaret Dodge in Kate Field's Washington.

General Grant's Well Meant Politeness.

The story is told of General Grant that while engaged in an animated argument with Mrs. John A. Logan on one occasion he opened his cigar case and offered her a cigar and took one himself. He lit his own and proceeded with the discussion. Mrs. Logan quietly accepted one, too, but secreted it without attracting attention. She now preserves that cigar as a souvenir.—Springfield Republican.

Looking For Information.

A good brother who recently offered prayer at a prayer meeting started to make a reference to Noah, but got a little flustered and forgot the name of the patriarch. After hemming and hawing for a few moments he turned to a neighbor and asked in a loud whisper, "Who was it built the ark?"—Washington News.

BAD ECZEMA ON BABY.

Head one Solid Sore. Itching Awful. Had to Tie His Hands to Cradle. Cured by Cuticura.

Our little son broke out on his head with a bad form of eczema, when he was four months old. We tried three doctors, but they did not help him. We then used your three CUTICURA REMEDIES, and after using them eleven weeks exactly according to directions, he began to steadily improve, and after the use of them for seven months he was entirely well. When we began using it his head was a solid sore from the crown to his eyebrows. It was also all over his ears, most of his face, and small places on different parts of his body. There were six weeks that we had to keep his hands tied to the cradle and hold them when he was taken up, and had to keep mittens tied on his hands to keep his fingernails out of the sores, as he would scratch if he could in any way get his hands loose. We know your CUTICURA REMEDIES cured him. We feel safe in recommending them to others.
