THE FAR NORTH.

SWEDEN.

The outsiders of Stockholm have now purchased their own printing office.

Five members of the lower house of the Riksdag, Messrs P. Wahlstromson, S. J. Ekman, J. A. Westerberg, J. M. Ericsson and L. Lindstaedt, have issued a circular, in which they declare that the union between Sweden and Norway, which has now existed nearly eighty years, is in danger of being dissolved, something that, should it happen, would be of great danger to the two national ities. "By that reason," write the five congressmen, "we take the liberty to ask the men and the women of Sweden and Norway, who believe in Jesus Christ, to harmoniously bring forth this matter in a prayer to the Lord next Sunday."

Several of the Good Templars of Filipstad have been "accused" because it has been proven that they owned shares in the whisky company of the city.

"The Swedish National Society" is the name of a recently organized union, the aim of which is to arouse and strengthen the patriotism of the Swedish people, and act as a counterbalance to the work of dissolving the society and its foundations, which has taken place in Sweden since some time back. Some of the most prominent men of Sweden are members of the union.

The whisky distillers of Sweden have taken steps to form a trust in order to limit the production in the future.

Four per cent bonds issued by the government of Sweden in 1889 were quoted at par in London the other day. Norwegian bonds drawing the same per cent interests were only quoted at 100 to 101.

Dr. Ferdinand Samuel, of Stockholm, has been appointed assistant professor at the university of Jena, Germany.

The liberal members of the Riksdag have made an attempt to extend the right to vote at local elections. The lower house passed a bill which provides that no single man shall cast more than a sixth of the entire vote in a rural district. But at the same time the upper house rejected a bill granting equal suffrage of youth. No other country in the civilized world with the exception of Mecklenburg-Schwerin gives the poorer classes so little influence in the local government in the country districts as Sweden does.

The shoemakers of Stockholm have struck for higher wages.

Count Carl Snoilsky, the famous poet, has been appointed an honorary doctor of philosophy by the university of Upsala.

Four hundred and five petitions from concrete-addicted Swedes to emigrate were discussed at the last meeting of the cabinet.

August Strindberg, the greatest Swedish author now living, has again ventured to try the excess or failure of marriage. The wedding took place on the island of Helgoland. Strindberg's wife is Miss Fischer, a lady of literary taste and a daughter of Edvard Uhl, publisher of the Neuer Deutsche Zeitung.

The crown prince has left Rome for Karlsruhe, for which city her children, the princes Gustaf Adolf and Wilhelm, accompanied by Count Chamberlain Lillieheck and Dr. Svedbom, their teacher, also departed.

The worst suffering in Norrland seems now to be over. According to the Aftonblad no more than seven crowns have been collected and sent to the famine-stricken people in the province of Norrbotten alone. The county commissioners of Umea propose that some of the money be saved for "rainy days in the future."

NORWAY.

The crown prince has left Christiania, but the king is yet staying there. The Norwegian crisis is far from passed, and the personal presence of Oscar is without doubt necessary, in order to hinder the majority of the left from "running amuck," as a paper expresses itself.

The Trondhjem labor union celebrated the 17 of May by a demonstration in favor of universal municipal suffrage.

The Norwegian Tourist club has elected three new guides, making the total number for the season twenty one. The annual expenses of the club are between $3,000 and $4,000.

The exhumation of the Viking ship at different points between Christiania and Bergen netted a very handsome sum, at the latter place the ship was visited by 8,000 persons in a few hours.

The deposits of twenty-six of the largest private savings banks of Norway, January 1st, amounted to $3,000,000, which is about $2,000,000 more than the year previous. The paid up capital stock was $4,000,000.

The total abstinence society of Christiania will erect a large business block on a corner of its own. The first floor will be used for a temperance restaurant, the second will be fitted up for offices, and a large hall will take up the third floor.

DENMARK.

The King of Denmark is staying at Wiesbaden. On his way home he will visit Emperor William.

Mr. Johansen, of Copenhagen, who is seventy years old, celebrated his fiftieth anniversary as dancing master. In spite of his age he can still trip a waltz with grace.

The cod fishers of Reykjavik, Iceland, made a immense catch this spring. The fish came in greater abundance and closer up to the shore than usual, and in many cases the boats were loaded twice a day.

The Temperance Home of Reykjavik (Mass) occurred on account of a court of free advertising by neglecting to show its colors on the king's birthday, although the home has built a flag and flagstaff of its own. The leaders of the temperance society afterwards explained that the society is so strong that it can afford to dispense with demonstrations of that ilk.
