By Telegraph to the "News."

A LIST OF FATALITIES.

Railroad Accidents and Other Casualties.

DENVER, Colo., July 15.—A [illegible] special from Colorado City says a terrible freight wreck occurred on the Colorado Midland at Ute Pass about 1 o'clock this morning, which resulted in the death of the engineer and fireman and the total destruction of the train of eleven cars loaded with ore and bullion.

Fireman James Wilson was buried beneath the wreck and his body has not yet been recovered. The accident occurred just after the train had left the tunnel and started to descend a steep grade. The brakes refused to work and the heavy loaded cars rushed down a steep declivity at a frightful rate of speed and at the first curve jumped the track.

ANOTHER DISASTER.

FORT SCOTT, Kansas, July 15.—At the crossing of the Missouri Pacific and the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroads, this morning, a freight train crashed in the chair car of the Missouri Pacific passenger train, knocking it off the track and turning it on its side. The following persons were injured more or less seriously: Mrs. W. H. Taylor, Salt Lake City; Mrs. W. H. Nixon, Kingman, Kansas; Jeff Parker, Eldorado, Kansas; L. F. Sheldon, Sedalia, Mo.; Mrs. Nannie Parker, Mrs. Jennie Carter, Sedalia, Mo.; a child of Mrs. S. H. Hillinger, J. W. Robinson, Walker, Kansas, and Mrs. Ida Miller. None of the injuries are thought to be fatal.

MR. ARMOUR'S FIRST COACHMAN.

What Happened When He Gave Him Instructions to Order an Outfit.

"I heard a story about P. D. Armour the other day," said a board of trade man. "It was regarding an incident that occurred some years ago. It was about the time that gorgeous turnouts became fashionable, and Mr. Armour had just purchased a costly carriage and a pair of high steppers to draw it.

"It was the caper then—and is now, for that matter—to have a real imported coachman. To sit behind a coachman who had driven a duchess' carriage was the wild ambition of South Siders. Well, Mr. Armour was right up with the procession. He imported an Englishman who was 'strictly proper' as to side whiskers and legs, and who had been employed in the 'ouse of Lord Tenby' by the Duke of Seven Dials or some equally important personage.

"Of course the new man had not brought his master's livery with him, and his wardrobe when he took possession of the Armour reins was not particularly 'nasty.' In fact, it was shabby. When the great pork packer ended his first drive behind the imported coachman he looked at the latter with an expression almost akin to contempt and called him to approach.

"'Haven't you any better clothes than these?' he inquired.

"'Hi 'ave not, your honor. W'en Hi was at 'ome Hi wore 'is grace's livery, hand I couldn't 'ave brought that with me, hand, hif your honor pleases—beggin' your honor's pardon—Hi thought your honor would find me in your honor's livery.'

"'I haven't got livery—how could I find you in it?'

"'Beggin' your honor's pardon again, Hi would be 'appy hif your honor would give me livery,' said the coachman.

"'I don't care whether it's livery or not, but you must dress decently. You can't drive my carriage in togs like you have on now. Here,' continued Mr. Armour, 'go down to this place and tell that man to make you whatever clothes may be necessary,' and he gave him the address of Matthews, the fashionable tailor.

"A week or so later a bill from Matthews came to the office. The clerks read it and whistled softly, and passed it from one to another to admire. That Englishman had played the old man's carte blanche to the limit. There was a 'box coat' that was charged at $90. A 'top coat' for $110. A 'livery suit' for $85. And there were gloves and breeches and waistcoats and more 'livery' till the bill footed up about $250.

"The 'old man' had not yet come to the office, and the 'boys' speculated as to what he would say and do when he saw that bill. All agreed that it would be something out of the common. And it was, but not as we expected it. The 'old man' was younger and more vehement then than he is now, and when necessary he could inject a great deal of forcefulness into his utterances, as many a clerk in the office knew.

"The bill, with others, was laid on his desk, and when he came in the boys stood around in silence and expectancy waiting the explosion. The 'old man' finally reached Matthews' bill. He kind of started at first sight of the figures, but then an amused expression and later a broad smile came on his face.

"'Come here, Favorite, come here, Webster,' said he, calling to him his two chief lieutenants and holding up the bill for their inspection. When they had inspected the bill a moment in silence the 'old man' laughed till his sides shook, and said, with an air of satisfaction, 'That's the kind of a coachman to have; he knows his business.'"—Chicago Times.

Free Up.

In a fashionable cafe not many blocks from Madison square:

"Waiter," calls a gentleman who was giving the finishing touches to a sumptuous repast, "why do you give me such a small portion of Pont Leveque cheese? I want more than that."

"I am verree sawree, sair, but eet ees against ze rules of ze place to give more of ze cheese at a time, because ze ozer customairs object to ze—you know," replied the waiter, tapping the point of his nose with his index finger.

The gentleman eats his cheese in silence. While sipping his cafe noir and smoking his cigar he calls for his carte, pays the amount of his indebtedness and leaves a nickel on the silver plate for the waiter.

"Eet is a verree small teep, sair," remarks the shocked flunky.

"Well," replies the gentleman, "I would give you more, but I understand the other customers object to large tips!"—New York Herald.

Danger in Machine Oil.

Take care how you let any machine oil or lubricator come in contact with a cut or scratch on your hand or arm, or serious blood poisoning may result. In the manufacture of some of these machine oils fat from diseased and decomposed animals is used. All physicians know how poisonous such matter is. The only safeguard is not to let any spot where the skin is broken be touched by any machine oil or lubricator.—Washington Star.

A Cheap Method of Purifying Water.

The method of purifying water invented by Dr. William Anderson, and now employed at Antwerp with success, consists in passing the water through a slowly revolving cylinder containing metallic iron in the form of scraps or filings. The estimated cost of purifying a million gallons in this way is about $1.50.—New York Times.

An Important Feature.

Friend—I suppose everything is settled in regard to the marriage of your daughter?

Stockley—Well, yes, everything but the bills.—Exchange.

Grisi's Children.

It is delightful to read of two persons in the same profession who are happily married. Identical tastes and pursuits bring about a certain harmony of relation which is both rare and beautiful. Grisi, the great singer, married the tenor Mario, and some incidents told of them and their children prove an unusually happy domestic life.

The prima donna identified her own success entirely with that of her husband, always preferring his advancement to her own. Perhaps the clever reply which she made to the Emperor Nicholas of Russia was half serious in embodying this spirit of self surrender.

"So," said his majesty jocosely, pointing to her children, "these are your little Grisettes!"

"No, sire," she returned, "they are my little Marionettes."

The children themselves tell an amusing story of their own sensations at one of their mother's public triumphs in Dublin. Grisi's admirers had dragged her carriage to the hotel, and she had sung to them again, "as if she were testing the heartstrings asunder and singing from the depths of her heart." The enthusiasm of the listeners knew no bounds.

"They climbed up the lamp post," said one of the children, in after years. "We thought they would come into the room, and when one of the speakers called out, 'Leave us one of your children!' our fright was awful. In a chorus of pitiful little voices we begged mamma not to leave us behind; we would be such good children."—Youth's Companion.

Didn't Meet Them.

Mrs. Hayseed—Did ye see any of them sharpers in the city.

Mr. Hayseed—Not a one, Miranda, not a one. But I met some old friends I never expected to see again. Do ye remember old Mr. Bigcrop? Well, I met a son of his. Thought both those boys was dead an' lyin' out there in the cemetery; but this one said he was snatched by grave robbers, and just as they was sellin' his body to a medical college he came to. Good enough for a book, Miranda, good enough for a book, and I told him he ought to write it, and he said he guessed he would, and he'd dedicate the book to me as his father's old friend. There's one queer thing, Miranda. This man's hair is black, while the Bigcrop boys had red hair, but he said it turned black from fright. He's way up in society, Miranda, and introduced me to young men named Vanderbilt and Astor and Gould and Drexel and ever so many more. I tell you, Miranda, these young fellers spend money! Some bills for cigars and things came in while we was talking, hundreds of dollars' worth, an' they whipped out the cash like a breeze. One of 'em happened to run short, and so I lent him all I had, but he said he'd send it by express tomorrow. I tell you what, Miranda, a smart man like me is just as safe in the city as in the country.—Good News.

Carlyle and Bores.

Whether Carlyle was a dead failure or not is a moot point, but he certainly did not know how to put up with bores. "The art of being savage to these people," or "such things"—as he would have designated them—which Scott so signally lacked, was possessed by him in its perfection. What he would "least endure," we are told, was being bored. "The unutterable which he heaped on unfortunate bores exceed Ernulphus' in exquisite variety."

A whole museum might be filled with Carlyle's bores alone. He obtained access to the immortals, and they bored him. To his acrid humor Charles Lamb was something less, almost, than a bore. Coleridge, whom he had not been disinclined to revere, was a bore of the most oppressive kind. "He bobbled about with us," writes the irreverent Thomas, "talking with a kind of solemn emphasis on matters which were of no interest. Nothing came from him that was of use to me that day, or in fact any day."—Exchange.

The Deadly Tarantula.

The poison of the Mygale species of tarantula is of a fearful nature—more dreaded than that of a rattlesnake—and unless only slightly scratched and heroic measures used the result is fatal. Many deaths are on record caused by these spiders. The most prolonged suffering was that of a San Diego woman. A tarantula sunk its fangs in her hand during the night. The flesh was cut away with a razor and medical assistance summoned at once. Her life was prolonged for a time as well as her sufferings. For three months she lingered under the effects, her hands constantly creeping and crawling along the bedding in horrible imitations of the motions of the tarantula.—Florence Companion.

Points of Interest.

A century ago this year of grace, 1891, the breeding of Shorthorn cattle began in America. They were improved so much for a time that they seemed to reach a climax, like nations, and then to go down hill. They were bred for years too much for mere size and fat. This must at length deteriorate any breed of animals, and these fine cattle went out of fashion for the time. Now, however, we have a Shorthorn revival in America which promises great results anew.

A case is reported in which a colt was cured of a bad attack of scours by administering to it every four hours a teaspoonful of elixir of lactopeptin in half a pint of sweet milk. When the treatment began the animal was so weak it could not stand, but in three days it was well. The same stockman tried the lactopeptin cure next on some young pigs with the scours, and it worked like magic. He gave the pigs each one-quarter of a teaspoonful three times a day.

Hides preserved in arsenic have been decided by the treasury department to be already disinfected, no matter whence they come. They can, therefore, be admitted directly into this country without any certificate of disinfection.
