THE BORNING FOWLS

Three Recognized Varieties—For Crossing Common Barnyard Fowls.

The Dorking is the most popular of all varieties of fowls in England. There it is regarded as pre-eminently the farmer's fowl. There varieties are recognized in this country—the white, the silver gray and the colored. The general characteristics of the three varieties are the same. All have five toes, the long toeless, full breast, rather short legs and heavy build. They also mature quickly, especially about the breast, which is especially full in both sexes. All have white or flesh colored legs and white skin.

The white variety is rather smaller than the other two, but possesses the same compact build and sturdy qualities. This variety is bred only with rose combs. Its plumage throughout is pure white. The colored variety is bred with both single and rose combs. The silver gray is also bred with both rose and single combs.

The Dorking is, first of all, a table fowl. Its flesh is tender, juicy and of delicious flavor. As a table fowl it stands at the head of the list.

As an egg producer the Dorking is not the equal of some varieties. It lays a medium sized, creamy white egg, many of which have a decidedly yellow tint. Its eggs are smaller than those of the Plymouth and less numerous than those of the Leghorn. It cannot compete in egg production with the Plymouth Rock.

The hens do not generally offer to sit early in the season, but when they do sit they prove exceptionally good ones and are among the best attentive mothers. In this connection up the merits of this fowl The Poultry World asks that the Dorking is valuable to use for crossing upon the common barnyard fowls. A farmer could hardly make a better choice, when desiring to introduce fresh blood into his flock of hens, than by selecting a good sired, well built Dorking cock. By so doing he would add to the size and weight of his chickens and produce them with more breast meat, and that with a richer flavor.

While being especially exempt from some diseases which attack many fowls, especially early fog, they are peculiarly liable to what is known as bumble foot. The authority quoted believes that, properly managed, the Dorking can be made to pay well, inasmuch as for the roughest eggs for hatching and for fine specimens for exhibition there is a good demand in this country and good prices are realized.

Reclaiming Arid Lands.

The fundamental principles underlying the reclamation of arid lands are laid down in a bulletin from the Wyoming station as follows:

Every holder of irrigable public land, whether state or United States, should be required to reclaim it or transfer it to some one who will. This principle requires a change in the federal laws to meet the conditions of the arid regions. We must recognize the fact that all arid lands are not capable of being reclaimed and irrigated. The existing land laws must provide for their disposal and management as grazing lands and make it possible for the owner of a small irrigated farm to also own some of the grazing lands.

Our mountain forests, the home and fountain of our water supply, must be preserved at all hazards. In the arid regions land and water are one and inseparable. Therefore the land and the water must go together. Owners of the land must also own the ditches and canals which make it productive, and the owners of ditches must be interested in the land they reclaim. There must be no water monopolies.

Our state, through our engineer and board of control, must be continued as the guardians of our water supply, so as to effectively protect the rights of the appropriators and prevent the waste of our water supply and the use and discharge of our streams. The power of the state ought to be exercised under proper legal restrictions, and the United States land laws should be so amended as to recognize the importance and expense rights of the state to control and appropriate its water supply as well as to protect its priority of rights on interstate streams.

The construction of large irrigation works must be under state control and according to prearranged plan, which will secure the reclamation of the largest body of land at the minimum of cost, due regard always being given to the permanency and durability of the works constructed. The state can easily reach this matter by requiring public building ditches and canals to secure the approval of the state engineer or to claim before water rights are granted. Failure to comply with this law ought may be made grounds of forfeiture of right acquired.

OBITUARY NOTES.

HANS PETER MILLER.

Died at Richfield, U. ah, November 27, 1894, of pneumonia, Hans Peter Miller, aged 61 years, 2 months, 10 days.

Deceased was born at Nexo, Bornholm, Denmark, August 8, 1833, of poor, humble and honest parents, who were believers in the Lutheran creed. One day he began to reflect upon religion at the age of 7 but as he fell under the influence of an infidel school teacher, whom he dearly loved, he was led to doubt the dogma of becoming a skeptic. This was ever ruled by Providence by a miracle, and having been born in unbelief, faith in Christ, his heart was open and ready to obey the Shepherd's voice. Passing by the first opportunity, the next day the latter-day work we will quote a few words from his journal of reminiscences: "I took up the Book of Mormon again and read and prayed with devout fervor. I prayed for a testimony of the truth and promised the Lord that I would become a Mormon and try to serve Him if He would give me a knowledge of the divinity of the call of Joseph Smith. Upon retiring I saw a light shining around me and a voice said: 'Joseph Smith is a true Prophet and the Book of Mormon is a divine revelation.' I rose and said: 'So shall it be.' Thus I received my testimony of this to the people." The light vanished and he lay reflecting, he continued and my testimony passed before me as a panorama. Just what I saw I cannot say, but it consisted of scenes of hardships, struggles, the sneers and scoffs of friends, and as I saw my blood flow the voice asked: 'Are you now willing to obey?' I answered joyfully, 'Yes I am!' and then the vision vanished. All my life since I have fully expected to lay my life down for this work, but it now seems like the latter part of my vision was but a test of my faith."

He subject was baptized in his twenty-eth year and immediately following fulfilled a mission of nine years and has been a faithful and active worker in the cause. He emigrated to Utah in 1862 and lived for some time in Mt. Pleasant. Sanpete county, the last twenty-three years having been spent in Richfield. He has filled many public positions with credit, and was president of the Thirty-sixth quorum of Seventies at the time of his death.

We shall miss our dear father but feel happy in remembering his beautiful, Christian life. We have always been surprised at the way in which he could overlook offenses. Long he has slumbered and forgot himself for the good of others, and we feel assured that he shall be numbered among those whose robes shall be washed white through faith in the Redeemer and that a glorious reward was awaiting him in the better land.

We say he is dying, dying! Ah, not he is waiting now!
If we only could see the glory that soon shall be revealed to view
Sickness, sorrow and our sunset should startle us not when
From a dying to death, to parental, things we, We may view, yet believe the never! He has the made grand and true.
And glad God our sweet home he may stand in a bright review!
God grant we may be in a state of evening shall gather around us all
We may meet in the end morning in the land where the saints call!

AN OPINION GIVEN.

Recently Mr. J. D. Thomas, of North Dakota, visited the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, and after carefully examining the country located in Winchester, he writes to Mr. V. Hugo Jacobs, Land and Immigration Agent, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Baltimore, Maryland, as follows: "I have been in nearly every state and territory of the United States, and am frank in my opinion that this valley surpasses all other sections in the Union. The lands are in good condition, and produce profitable crops. I am about to be directing my here, and solicit those seeking pleasant and profitable homes to locate in this country."
