A FATAL MISTAKE.

A Dose of Cantharides Given to a Child, by Mistake, with Fatal Results.

PROF. STIEHL ATTEMPTS SUICIDE.

Horse Thieves at Work in Sanpete County.

On last Wednesday night some miscreant entered the stable of Justice Larter and stole three horses. One was a large 4-year-old bay, another a 5 or 6-year-old gray, branded half circle W, and one 5 or 6-year-old gray. That the horses did not break away and escape is shown in one instance where the rope by which the horse was tied had been cut. The marshal has been informed of the matter, but up to this time nothing has been heard from the animals.—Mount Pleasant Pyramid.

ALLEGED THIEF.

Yesterday afternoon (Monday) a party called up the city jail on the telephone and reported that a man had been seen a moment before trying to sell some goods which it was believed had been stolen. Officer Chase was immediately started on a horse in pursuit. When overtaken by the officer the man started to run down Harper's lane from Lincoln avenue.

Chase who had by this time left his horse behind followed after him on foot but finding his man getting away pulled his revolver and shot at him several times. This had the effect of checking the thief, who then tried to run into a private dwelling house. The occupants of the house when they saw him coming quickly locked the door which they had no more than done when the man fell heavily against it and tried to enter. By this delay Officer Chase was enabled to catch up with him and in another instant he had him by the neck. He gave the name of James White and will be given a hearing this morning.—Ogden Union.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

Prof. Stiehl, a resident of Provo, attempted to commit suicide at Ogden last night by taking morphine. He had a large shorthand class in Salt Lake at one time, but his drinking habits were such that he had to give his profession up for want of patronage. He then concluded to come to Ogden, and on reaching that city proceeded to imbibe freely from the flowing bowl.

For a week he has been well under the "influence," and the other day wrote his wife that she would never see him again. As soon as she received the letter she jumped on the next train and reached Ogden last night.

Mr. Stiehl had taken a dose of morphine in the evening, and while walking along Grant Avenue was about to fall into a deep sleep. As he was passing the residence of Mr. Smith, near Twenty-fifth street, that gentleman thought Stiehl was drunk and took him into a room where he fell asleep. Stiehl was aroused after considerable effort and taken to the Broom hotel, where his wife was waiting his appearance. Though out of danger he is sleeping considerable today. She will take him home with her, and it is to be hoped that he will brace up and be a man. He is well qualified for business purposes if he would let strong drink alone.—Union.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

A terrible accident which occurred at Hooper in this county last Friday has just been brought to light. It occurred in the family of John R. Stoddard.

One of his children, an infant, was suffering from constipation. Mrs. Mary E. Bybee, its grandmother, who had been in the habit of using jalap in her family as a remedy, administered a dose of what she supposed to be jalap to the child and also took a dose herself. This was on Thursday. On Friday the child died and the lady herself was dangerously ill. Nothing was known of the cause of the trouble until a man who had formerly stayed at the house, arrived. He stated that while there he used some cantharides, commonly known as Spanish fly for a horse he was treating and the powder had been left. It was then discovered that by mistake Mrs. Bybee had given and taken the cantharides. She was so ill herself that doubts of her recovery were at one time entertained. A physician was called on Saturday and yesterday it was reported that she was gradually improving.

The fatal mistake has created much sorrow in the family, but the two powders are so much alike and Mrs. Bybee had no knowledge of any other powder being in the house, so that no blame can be attached to her. Many rumors were started in the settlement as to the fatal outcome of the mistake, but the above are the facts as far as all evidence and information can be secured.—Ogden Standard.

One Less at Home.

One less at home!
The charmed circle broken; a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place,
But cleansed and saved and perfected by grace.
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word unspoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more.
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, a place unfilled and desolate
And far away, our coming to await,
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
Chill as the earth-born mist the thought would rise
And wrap our footsteps round and dim our eyes;
But the bright sunbeam darteth from the skies—
One more in heaven!

One more at home!
This is not home, where, cramped in earthly mold,
Our sight of Christ is dim, our love is cold;
But there, where face to face we shall behold,
Is home and heaven.

One less on earth!
Its pain, its sorrow and its toil to share;
One less the pilgrim's daily cross to bear;
One more the crown of ransomed soul to wear,
At home in heaven.

One more in heaven!
Another thought to brighten cloudy days,
Another theme for thankfulness and praise,
Another link on high our souls to raise
To home and heaven!

One more at home—
That home where separation cannot be,
That home where none are missed eternally,
Lord Jesus, grant us all a place with thee,
At home in heaven!

A SHELTER IN THE TIME OF STORM

Affecting Instances of God's Care for the Afflicted.

Spare not the stroke; do with us as thou wilt;
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become
Thy perfect image, O our God and Lord!

It is natural for us to shrink from suffering, and yet how well we know that it is but the sculpture of discipline—the Master's own hand hewing and polishing with his skillful chisel. The hidden beauty must be brought out, the sweet music in our souls must be awakened. Is the cup bitter? Yes, but God holds it to our lips, and it is no poisoned draught. Is our temptation a great one? Jesus is our refuge—the tower wherein lies safety. Are we faint and weary? There is the living bread for us. Is the struggle a long one and the fight hot? Our Saviour is our shield.

Gotthold went to visit a person in deep affliction and sorrow, and was told by the family that he would find him in the garden. Thither he followed, and found him employed in clearing a vine of its superfluous leaves. After a friendly salute he inquired what he was doing. "I find," was the reply, "that owing to the abundant rain this vine is overgrown with wood and leaves, which prevents the sun from reaching and ripening the grapes. I am therefore pruning part of them away that it may bring its fruit to maturity." Gotthold rejoined, "And do you find that in this operation the vine resists and opposes you? If not, why are you displeased that a gracious God should do to you what your vine must not be displeased that you do to it?"

Beecher says: "Men think God is destroying them because he is tuning them. The violinist screws up the key till the tense cord sounds the concert pitch, but it is not to break it, but to use it tunefully, that he stretches the string upon the musical rack."

Some one tells the story of a mother who had learned the secret of philosophy and true Christian faith. She had endured a long and painful illness with great patience. The evidence of her suffering often caused her attendants to weep with sympathy. The heroic sufferer replied to her sensitive daughter, whose tears fell upon her mother's face, "Patience, darling; it is only the chiseling."

When Scoresby was selecting his men to accompany him in his arctic explorations he needed sailors that could stand the severest exposure, and who had nerve to bear the worst trials. So every man who applied to accompany the expedition was made to stand barefooted on a great block of ice while the surgeon examined his body and Scoresby inquired into his past history. Scores were rejected at once, as they had not the nerve to endure the test. The men who stood the trial made up a band of the most glorious heroes. A writer, in commenting on the above, says: "So sometimes God tries us when he has in store for us some great undertaking. Many faint and excuse themselves from the start. Some endure, and make the heroes and leaders of the church."—Ernest Gilmore in Christian at Work.

The Great Forty Days.

The forty days immediately succeeding the resurrection of our Lord are wholly unique in his life as the son of man. Never before had he been seen under similar conditions; he will never be seen again under like circumstances. He had risen from the dead, but was not yet glorified. He was the same son of man with whom his disciples had lived in fellowship before his death; but his resurrection had wrought a change in his relation to them, and in theirs to him.

They were not to know him after the flesh henceforth. The old intercourse based upon bodily recognitions was at an end. But before their purely spiritual fellowship with the ascended Lord began this brief and mediating season of intercourse was granted to them. It was not wholly like either the human fellowship of the past or the spiritual fellowship of the future, but partook of each in part—a reminiscence of the one, a preparation for the other.

The relation of these days to the demonstration of the resurrection as a fact is of the first importance. It was during this period that those convictions of the reality of the risen Lord were begotten from which nothing thereafter was able to swerve the disciples. Their Lord appeared among them, at intervals, with such frequency and so variously as to dispel every doubt of his reality and identity.—Christian Inquirer.

Cook in a Fix.

Mistress—Lisa, why have you brought no fruit from the market?

Cook—Well, you see, ma'am, you don't like pears, I don't like plums, the young lady doesn't eat cherries, the young master doesn't care for apples, and your husband won't touch peaches. Then what sort of fruit was I to get?—[illegible]

HOME LIBRARIES.

Established Practicability of a New Form of Charitable Work.

The charity organization societies of some of our large cities are gradually extending their work among the poor and passing beyond the lines of simple benevolence. The Baltimore society is co-operating with the industrial education association and cooking schools in efforts to teach the practical principles of social science and to apply them to every day life, and in Boston an excellent work has been done by the establishment of home libraries.

A glance at this plan will serve to show at once its simplicity and the amount of good which it can undoubtedly accomplish. A bookcase large enough to hold fifteen books and five bound periodicals is fastened to the wall in the living room of a poor family, a boy or girl of the house, thirteen or fourteen years old, being made librarian and held responsible for the care of the library.

A club is formed of ten of the children of the neighborhood, who meet together once a week at the house where the library is. At these weekly meetings a visitor from the Children's Aid society, which supplies the books, is always present. The children then return the books which were given out at the last meeting, and take out others to be read at home. When this has been done the visitor, who is generally a woman, tries to draw out the children's opinions of the books and to quicken their interest in what has been read.

She also plays games with them, and sometimes teaches sewing to any who may have a liking for it. The books include fairy tales, stories of travel and the lighter kind of history, and so when the children reach the age at which they are permitted to use the public library they have learned to read a better class of books than they would choose if they had not had the training of the home library.

The cost of a library complete, with forms for keeping the records, is only $23. This plan is undoubtedly an effective means of benefiting the poor. At an age when their character is forming, when their ordinary pursuits and amusements bring them into close contact with all that is worst in the byways of a great city, they begin to realize that there is something better and brighter beyond their own daily routine, and are given an opportunity of enjoying a legitimate and elevating pleasure.

The books which they take home to read are read by their parents and by their older brothers and sisters, and the little librarian in whose house the library is placed awakens to a sense of responsibility and orderliness. The improvement spreads to the rest of the family, and the home becomes brighter and more cheerful.

The first of these libraries was started in Boston four years ago and they now number forty-six. The society which has charge of them says that "good temper, good manners and cheerfulness—what we must look for in children—follow directly in the train of the work. Interest in reading the best books is developed, the children's pride is stimulated by a sense of organization and proprietorship, home amusement and occupation become realities, the family tie is strengthened and individual character developed."—Philadelphia Record.

Variation of a Popular Game.

There is a favorite game called "Who Wrote It?" in which the titles of books are given or bits of verse are quoted, and the company are expected to give the authors' names. But people have played this for some time and are beginning to find out who wrote them, and so the game has lost a little of its first zest. Why not make a change for once and take the names of the authors of the operas? "They're too well known," you say. Are they? Of course you who say so know all of these then. Who wrote Martha, Norma and Aida? Who wrote Lucia, The Crown Diamonds and The Magic Flute? Who wrote The Queen's Lace Handkerchief, Oberon, The Barber of Seville, Fra Diavolo, Romeo and Juliet, Hamlet, The Merry Wives of Windsor, The Prophet, The Black Domino, The Siren, The Huguenots, The Queen of Sheba, Zampa, Don Juan, Esclarmonde, The King of Ys, Carmen, The Africaine, Othello, Traviata, Rigoletto, The Daughter of the Regiment, The Bohemian Girl, Fidelio?—New York Evening Sun.

New York's Night Workers.

The number of night workers in New York would make quite a formidable army. It is calculated that 60,000 people begin their labor after dark and their numbers are being constantly increased. The hotels and restaurants employ the greatest number, about 10,000 people being necessary to supply the city's night wants in that direction. The bakers come next on the list, and that the sleeping portion of the city may have its hot rolls and fresh bread for the coming day 7,000 people are laboring. The saloon keepers and their assistants number the same as the bakers. The butchers are 3,000 strong and the gardeners and marketmen are equally numerous.

The steamboatmen and sailors, the liverymen and hack drivers, and the milkmen are 7,000 in number. The surface cars need 2,000 men and the elevated roads 1,500. There are 2,000 engineers and firemen, 1,000 district messenger boys, 1,000 printers, and 1,000 men in the fire department. The different telegraph offices employ 700 men, and the journalists, postoffice clerks and custom house inspectors number each about 600. There are 1,700 men in the police department, and just one-half of those patrol the streets every night. Then there are private watchmen, laborers, fruit venders, etc., and the number is estimated at 10,000. Only for these night workers the life and wellbeing of the city would be sadly incomplete.—New York Cor. Richmond Times.
