BUSINESS INTEGRITY.

We desire to say a few words to our readers this morning, on the subject of "business integrity." We are moved to do this, by the conviction that among business men, there is at the present day a fearful looseness of opinion with regard to this subject. There seems to be a large class of business men in our day, who are sadly deficient in those nice principles of honor, by which the business men of a century ago were so generally governed and which led them to consider bankruptcy as a far worse calamity than death. Those grand old "merchant princes" of a century ago, attached more dishonor to a failure to meet one's pecuniary obligations, than we of the present day associate with the crime of murder. To become a bankrupt, was to be hopelessly disgraced and dishonored, and the merchant of those days who went down in financial ruin, seldom or never succeeded in getting on his feet again as a business man.

It is hardly necessary to make the statement, that public opinion and general usage have changed somewhat in this respect during the last hundred years. But little disgrace, comparatively, now attaches to the man whose bankruptcy has ruined a score or two of his confiding and trusting creditors, although he himself seems in no degree impoverished by his failure. Precisely who is to blame for this change in public sentiment, we shall not attempt to determine, but our readers we are confident will agree with us in the conclusion, that when a business man becomes a bankrupt, and is thus the means of entailing financial ruin upon many others, while he himself has recently pocketed enough to render him entirely independent for the rest of his life, he has not been governed by the principles of integrity in the general management of his business affairs. The man who makes an honest failure in business, will insist upon giving up all he has in the world, towards satisfying his creditors.

But there is another phase to our subject. We contend that all business transactions, of whatever nature, should be conducted on principles of the strictest integrity. In all his dealings with customers the business man should confine himself to perfectly truthful representations. Although this proposition, at first glance, seems too plain to require demonstration, we beg our readers to consider how very generally it is disregarded and set at naught in business circles. How common it is for the person who has anything to sell to hide from the eye of the would-be purchaser any defect in the article, while he extols its excellence beyond its real merit, in order to effect a sale. And yet a merchant when offering a piece of goods to a customer, if under the control of what we call the principle of business integrity, would direct the attention of his customer to any real defect in or damage to the piece of goods under examination, instead of representing it as being perfect and fixing his price according. There should always be perfect truthfulness between the merchant and his customer, and deception should never be resorted to on the part of the former, in order to induce his customer to pay full price for a damaged article.

Again, the principle of business integrity should form the basis of all official action, whether the official station be high or low. Nowadays men seeking for office are usually required to give some public pledge of the course they will pursue if elected, and a man of integrity will strive to carry out any pledges thus given to the best of his ability, utterly regardless of any personal consequences to himself as an individual. If a political party goes into the canvas before some presidential election, with a platform pledging its candidates to reform in the civil service and greater economy in the government expenditures, they must carry out these pledges in all honesty and faithfulness, even though it should interfere with any coveted increase of their salaries, or else the people will suspect them to be entirely destitute of political integrity, and mark them as utterly unfit to be trusted in the future.

Not a few of our once leading politicians have been laid on the shelf, for precisely this lack of political integrity, and there are a good many more of the same lot, who deserve to be set aside as unfit for the public service.—Colorado Free Press.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 12th, 1875.

G. W. Thatcher,
Gen. Agent Steamer "General Garfield."

DEAR SIR.—Having been requested by you to examine the boilers, etc., of the steamer General Garfield, we have to report that we have given them a thorough examination, and found them in excellent condition, fully furnished with all the necessary safeguards required by the U. S. Government, and in charge of a competent and experienced engineer.

We consider them fully capable of doing the work required of them, and believe that if inspected by a government inspector, they would be classed as A No. 1.

We likewise wish to state that every facility was afforded us for internal and external inspection by Capt. Davis and Mr. McCall, Engineer. Yours, etc.,
