BURY THE HATCHET.

The campaign is over and some man has been elected to, and some other man has been defeated for, each office that required to be filled at this election. Now let the hatchet be buried. Let the man who has won, wear his honors modestly and with magnanimity; and let the man who has lost, accept the result with a good grace, and show his own worthiness by congratulating his victorious rival for the favor of the people.

The die is cast; now let every citizen accept the result with good nature and a brotherly feeling for his fellow citizens regardless of party lines. If there has been prior to the election too much effort expended in fomenting ill-feeling—a fact generally admitted—what shall be said of the man who labors to perpetuate ill-will and strife after the people have spoken at the polls? He is a public enemy. Most of the members of the respective parties in Utah are new converts, and many of them have shown the superabundance of zeal and the deficiency of wisdom which often characterize new proselytes. Let conservatism and contentment with the result be the sequel to the vigorous conflict that has been waged.

At this writing, it is not known which party has triumphed; but it is known that no region on the American continent has more days of sunshine, or a better class of people, or richer resources, or a more glorious destiny opening before it, than Utah has; hence the folly of succumbing to disappointment over the results of an election. Let the man who has worked during the campaign—and there are many who have shown extraordinary zeal and devotion—now give his time and energies to something more substantial than politics, regardless of any miscarriage of his expectations that he may have experienced. Any man who will work energetically and intelligently in Utah, especially in the line of developing her natural resources, will surely win his reward.

When two teams meet on the diamond field to contend for the applause of the crowd in the grand stand and for the gate receipts, they fight hard to win. But when the game is over the members of the opposing teams mingle together, laugh over the struggle and shake hands at parting, while exchanging friendly threats and boasts of what each side will and can do the next time they meet in a contest of skill and strength.

So let it be with this election. Not that we would place upon the same plane with a baseball game a contest over the issues of government; but we would encourage cheerful acquiescence in the result of an election as one of the strongest safeguards of the liberties and highest interests of the people.

A CORRUPT CITY.

The facts brought to light before the Lexow committee relative to the police administration in New York City, prove that there exists in that city a condition of corruption of the most shocking and revolting character. The police department, embracing the patrolmen and detectives, captains, magistrates and attorneys, are reeking with rottenness. Money paid to them has insured immunity for any kind of crime short of murder; and if the diabolical work of the emotional insane under that head, and it might so be claimed, [illegible] with impunity, in fact, practiced as a profession, with the full knowledge of the officers of the law.

Instead of protecting the public from criminals, the police, in consideration of blackmail, have "protected" the criminals from public prosecution. Burglars, panel thieves, [illegible] and other kinds of criminals, have been in league with the officers, and the keepers of houses of ill fame seem to have been the special object of the [illegible] care of the latter, presumably because they paid an [illegible] to the officers to whom they were allotted for the purpose of tribute. The extent to which brothels were encouraged and aided is indicated by the testimony of one woman who went on the stand and stated under oath that she at one time was the proprietress of twenty disorderly houses and that for each one she paid a periodical assessment to the police for "protection." In all, she claimed to have paid in bribes $[illegible].

The worst feature of this condition, and the one which is most discouraging to the patriotic citizen and most difficult to reach with a remedy, is the corruption of the judges upon the bench. When a criminal, for a paltry, or for any sum, can buy the judge whose duty it is to try him, the foundations of public security and confidence have been undermined and the way has been made clear for any kind of lawlessness.

The Lexow committee is dealing with evils that have taken deep and far-reaching root. The agencies to which society under civilized governments looks for protection against such evils are the very ones that have ravaged them in the American metropolis, and the voters there might as well expect to see a man lift himself by his bootstraps as to see their police department purge itself of uncleanness.

It may be that the state legislature, of which the Lexow committee is a part, will do something to mitigate the evils and correct the corruption which that committee is exposing; and if any material improvement shall result from the exposure the latter will be justified. But the disclosures that have been made will remain a lasting disgrace to the city of New York.

WHAT SHALL IT CONTAIN?

It would have been a pleasant relief in the monotonous rehashing of arguments about the tariff, and which party has been and will be most affectionate in its treatment of Utah, if some of those "publicists" who have been regaling the large and numerous crowds that seem to have little employment except to attend political meetings, had given the people something to think about in connection with the Constitution soon to be framed for our new State.

Each party nominated 107 delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Before these lines are seen by many of the News' readers, that number of delegates will be chosen. But how are the voters to know which set of nominees was to give them the best Constitution? What do the respective party candidates propose to put in the Constitution, and what do they want left out of it? We have yet to hear, or hear of, the first intelligent appeal to the voters, on this line, made by a political speaker of either party, although each has had an army of "orators" ostensibly engaged in educating the people politically.

Inasmuch as the political leaders of both parties have been practically silent as to what they desire or intend to see put in or left out of the new State charter, and inasmuch as the nominees to the Constitutional Convention, on both sides, have almost unanimously refrained from giving the people the benefit of any views or ideas they may have respecting any issue connected with the Constitution, the News thinks it proper, at this early stage, to begin offering a few suggestions.

As to the composition of the body which is to frame the all-important document, it has been generally conceded, and the result will show that the idea has been acted upon, that a few lawyers, but not too many, would be needed in the Convention. A few men skilled in finance, are also useful. Men of experience in affairs, a few merchants, and a goodly number of men who have been successful in establishing home manufactures, will comprise valuable elements in such a body, in so far as they are men of sound judgment, fair education and unimpeachable integrity. The sort of experience which has been gained by the men who have founded colonies in these mountain regions will be especially valuable. But the principal requirement as a qualification for a seat in the body which is charged with the solemn duty of framing the basic law of our new and glorious commonwealth, is statesmanship. We trust that as many statesmen as possible have been elected members of the Convention. There cannot be too many of them." In fact it would be all the better if every member were a statesman; but this is hardly to be expected. Into such bodies intellectual dwarfs will find their way, in spite of all practical safeguards that can be established. Let us hope that all such of this class will have sense and decency enough to keep themselves in the background, and thus prevent their smallness from being too painfully advertised.

We have been of the opinion that so far as this convention is concerned, the politician, the demagogue and the pot-house orator should be given the go-by. Not a man of such history should have been selected. The politician will work for his party, and a constitutional convention is the last place in the world for a display of partisan purpose or feeling. A demagogue will seek to gain favor and applause for himself, maybe at the expense of the people when the effects of his fallacious work are being felt; and the pothouse will work to increase salaries and emoluments, thereby increasing the burdens of taxation. As already hinted, the community relies upon the square, reliable members of the convention to suppress and squelch every [illegible] of the kind referred to. This paper in advocating an independent and non-partisan convention has insisted that a man's party fealty could not properly be brought into question on account of his vote for delegates to that body. It is not a partisan body, and party politics have properly no part nor place in its deliberations. We have held that the restraints of honor which ordinarily hold a man within his party, and to the support of its candidates, were relaxed in respect to the Constitutional Convention, far enough at least to allow every voter to vote for the man whom he was most willing to entrust with power to frame the charter of his and his children's liberties. Leading men in both political parties in Utah have expressed views in line with what is here set forth. What all the people want and need, in members of of that body, are the very best men, regardless of politics, that can be found in the Territory, for upon its character and work may depend more than hangs on many ordinary elections.

The hope of the people therefore, now that the election is over, is that every man who has been successful will feel to sink partisanship, selfishness and petty whims of every character, and give to the whole State as strong and capable an exhibition of patriotism as he knows how.

JAPANESE POLITENESS.

An Asiatic correspondent writing in one of the American magazines cites a Japanese construction of the honor that is popularly supposed to prevail among thieves, which burglary, so thievable of the Pacific might read and copy with profit. He relates that three robbers broke into a dyer's house while he was away and, gently asked his mother how much money there was in the house. She answered that there were just 27 yen and 50 sen. The chief robber laughed, and said, "You are a good old woman, and we believe you. If you were poor, we would not rob you at all. Now we only want a couple of kimonos and this," laying his hand on a very fine silk overdress. The old woman replied: "All my son's kimonos I can give you, but I beg you will not take that, for it does not belong to my son, and was confided to us only for dyeing. What is ours I can give, but I cannot give what belongs to another." "That is quite right," approved the robber, "and we shall not take it."

Of course the politeness was not all on the side of the malefactors—the old lady herself showed rather more consideration for her rude visitors than most American victims would have done under similar circumstances. Still, the incident pleasantly illustrates the cordiality that under certain conditions can be made to exist between people who are ordinarily supposed to be at daggers' points of enmity.

A TRANSIT of Mercury will occur on Saturday, Nov. 10, beginning about five minutes before eleven o'clock and ending about twelve minutes after four (eastern standard time). The planet moves across the disc of the sun from east to west, looking like a black round spot on the face of the heavenly luminary, but cannot be seen with the naked eye. It is regarded as an important astronomical event, as offering an opportunity for measuring the diameter of the planet with great exactness and for investigations regarding its atmosphere.

Real Political Issues

WHILE TRYING TO SOLVE THEM PERSONAL BUSINESS SHOULD ALSO BE REMEMBERED, LIKE JUDGE COLBORN AND POPPERTON PLACE "ALL BE SAME."

In these days of political strife people are apt to become so occupied in discussing the merits of their respective parties and their respective candidates, that they forget business, home and family. Thomas K. Beecher once said in a sermon, "that some men so loved their church that they forgot their Christ, and some so loved their party they forgot their country;" and the truth of the assertion is very apparent in this city at the present time, and a word of caution may not come amiss, and all those who prefer to back their opinions by a bet, than by an argument, we will remember the advice of the gambler to his friend to "never make a bet he could not afford to lose," which if properly heeded would make election bets very few this fall. But if you must bet, bet some useful article and not cash, that the winner is in duty bound to Browning and so come the better off for having won. We would suggest a Suit of Clothes or an Overcoat (and we are not averse to becoming stake-holders.) The winner would be made joyous and comfortable, make a respectable appearance when making application for a job in the gift of his favorite candidate, and the loser would not be hard [illegible] in paying his wager at the very modest prices at which we are making handsome clothing this fall, and the winner can surely satisfy himself from our immense stock—nearly five hundred styles of suits to select from.
