STARTLING DEVELOPMENTS.

The Canton (Wyo.) Murder Case.—Large Catches of Fish by Indians.

Judge Cheney of Reno, Nevada, has declared the new grand jury law, passed by the last Nevada legislature, which reduced the number of grand jurors to ten and provided that eight of them could find a true bill, unconstitutional.

Startling developments are expected soon as a result of the investigation by the Ada county, Idaho, grand jury of the charges of legislative bribery. What was at first considered a huge joke, which would "end in smoke," seems likely to terminate in a terribly sober reality which will sweep the political field like a tornado.

The Indians are catching large numbers of salmon trout. One chinook son of the forest familiarly known as Tommy brought in eight shining beauties this week as a proof of his skill in the piscatorial art. The fish averaged from eight to sixteen pounds each. Our white fishermen are catching many brook trout and white fish.—Salmon city (Idaho) Recorder.

Cheyenne, Nov. 11.—It has been decided by the commissioners of Johnson county, Wyoming, to withdraw the prosecution of the Canton murder case, as they are unable to find material witnesses, and they do not care to have the county bear the great expense incident to the trial with no prospect of conviction. The case is to be called at Evanston April 3, on a change of venue, 300 miles from Buffalo, and the estimated expense of a trial as figured by the commissioners would be $10,000.

A special dispatch from Wells, Nevada, says definite reports from the snake river ranges are that the snow has gone off and that the stock that been wintering without loss. The Humboldt ranges have from one to two feet of snow also low yet, without any immediate prospect of a thaw, but as the winter started in late there will be but little loss of range stock. Winter was never known before to hold out so late as this without a thaw. There are reports of some loss of sheep in the southern ranges on the edge of White Pine county, Utah.

A. L. Rice has just closed a contract for the construction of a canal and reservoir at or near Lima, Montana. The main canal will be thirty miles long and twenty feet wide, and when laterals will make over a hundred miles ditching. The reservoir will cover the latitude of a lake ninety feet high, which will tank the water so as to make a lake about eight miles long and three miles wide. Mr. Rice says it will take about seventy-five teams all summer to do the work, and he will be obliged to hire additional teams. The work will be commenced as soon as the weather will permit.

E. J. Parkinson, editor of the Carson Evening Tribune, was horsewhipped on Main street on Thursday evening by a young woman whose character he had assailed in the previous night's issue of the Tribune. It appears that two employees of the Arlington house were discharged several days before, and Parkinson wrote a very suggestive paragraph as to the cause. He was not the evening in front of Sweeney's saloon by a young woman, who approached him with the intent to hot eye. Raising her whip, she struck him across the face, and was preparing to follow her lead when he raised his cane, exclaiming, "You shall not cowhide me." She then lost heart and ceased delivering blows. A crowd of men, all in sympathy with the girl, gathered, and a good Samaritan in the shape of a Tribune compositor came to Parkinson's assistance and escorted him home. The young woman's anger then increased and she started after Parkinson again, vowing to thrash him within an inch of his life, repeatedly saying, "I'll whip that cur Parkinson and mark him." An expectant throng gathered in the foot of the street to see the war, and although the girl walked rapidly the object of her wrath reached his house before she caught him.

An Eventful Life Ended.

Sister Harriet Wight Holmes, who died at Montpelier, Bear Lake Co., Idaho, march 17th, 1893, aged nearly 61 years, was pre-eminently a pioneer. A correspondent writes that she was the daughter of the late Moses C. Phelps and his wife Laura Clark Phelps, whose names are familiar to all the earlier Saints. The imprisonment of Morris Phelps, with the Prophet Joseph and Parley P. Pratt in Missouri, and the heroic part played by the mother of the deceased, in her husband's and Parley's escape from Liberty Jail, Mo., are graphically described in Parley's History and on the annals of Church history. Harriet inherited the noble traits of her parents and never during her eventful life did she falter or shrink from her duties as wife, mother and Saint. Her home was always an open house to all, and her acts of hospitality and kindness unlimited and proverbial.

She was born in Lyman Wight's fort, at Independence, Jackson Co., Missouri, april 7th, 1832, being the first female child born amongst the Saints in that historical place. With her parents' family she moved to Macedonia, Illinois, after being driven out of Missouri by the mob, where her mother died in 1842. From that place the family moved to Nauvoo, where they remained until the summer of 1846, when they joined the general exodus making their next stopping place near Council Bluffs, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, at a place called Ferryville on the banks of the Missouri, opposite Winter Quarters. At this place deceased was married Dec. 25th, 1848, to James Holmes. In the spring of 1849 with her husband and father's family she emigrated to Utah, making a home in Alpine, Utah county, Utah. In 1864 with her husband and father's family she removed to and settled in Montpelier, Bear Lake county, Idaho. Subsequently Mr. Holmes with his family removed to Mesa city, Arizona, but not liking the locality they returned to Montpelier. She left seven children, all living in Bear Lake county, except her oldest daughter Laura, who resides in Mesa city, Arizona. Her son Hyrum is now on a mission to the Indian Territory. She has twenty-six living grandchildren, thirteen who have died, in all thirty-nine, and one great-grandchild.
