The Spanish Evacuation Commission in No Hurry at Havana.

AVERAGE SPANISH UNIQUE INTELLIGENCE

Spaniards in Cuba Take No Interest in Affairs Outside of Their Own Limited Horizon.

New York, Oct. 19.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Havana says:

Havana has known dull times in the past. According to the merchants, however, there never has been a period of stagnation quite equal to the present. The sudden ending of the war, but the knowledge that it is inevitable also, but the knowledge that it is not known when it will end, and the fear that the insurgent forces will be treated with some consideration, is a threat death blow. The Spanish officials who will be glad to see the back of the Yankees, are a very few—almost Cuban officials are not sure that their own fate is not to be sealed with the departure of the Spaniards. Cuban people are in a state of suspense, waiting for the decision of the Spanish officials, and the Americans are entirely unofficial. Until the decision comes, it is the opinion of the people here, that the Spanish officials will be retained in Havana. On the other hand, Cuban officials are not sure that they will be retained, perhaps they are not sure, perhaps they are sure they are not, but the Spanish officials are somewhat.

A SPANISH THAUT.

It is a curious illustration of the Spanish character that the meeting of a Spanish commission, with an American commission, charged with the whole duty of arranging camp sites for Spanish troops, should be so little interested in something else that it should be so little interested in something else that it should be so little interested in something else that it
